

Georgetown Tennis Club

The general meeting of the Georgetown Tennis Club, held April 16, saw a fairly good turnout, and with the exception of some well placed enthusiastic comments regarding the tennis facilities and their future, business was dispensed with without delay.

Some members expressed concern that the club had not pursued the question of tennis facilities and their expansion with the town council. Club president Sid Harris replied, stating the reasons he was given for the dropping of the third Joseph Gibbons court and saying that a proposal is to be made to the council for the new courts at the arena complex which has space allowed for tennis.

An outline of the proposal was given to the meeting by the director, Ed Serjeantson.

The consensus of opinion was that more courts are badly need in Georgetown.

Dave Kentiah from the Ontario Lawn Tennis Association was present and addressed the meeting, explaining the function of his organization and outlining some plans for the future.

With another four weeks to go until new memberships are cut off, people again are showing their interest in the sport by joining up at a rate on par with previous years.

The opening day tournament on Saturday April 27, was blessed with fantastic weather and all who participated went home a little reddened by the sun. When the points were tallied up, Ed Serjeantson was the men's winner and Clara Brandt was the women's winner.

It was evident, however, that two courts are just not adequate for those who want to play. Many people, understandably, left before they had played their three matches simply because they had to wait so long between games.
