The word for 1975: You

By Gerry Landsborough I always approach the New Year, the same way I approach my first day at the beach. Everyone is in up to their necks, and when I wet my big toe at the water's edge it feels unbearably cold. Someone will always yell "It's great once you are in for awhile." And sooner or later, I'm bound to take the plunge and go in up to my neck so I can join the fun.

I start each new year the same way. We look back on '74 and, while there is always progress and some good to recall, the overall picture remains the same.

We have equal numbers of experts telling us that "things will get better", "things will get worse", "we are witnessing the end of democracy", "democracy is entering the golden age", "man will always survive", "the end of mankind is at hand"...and so it

The new year again becomes a year of choices. So many experts reflect on '74 as though it were a year of surprises, instead of a year of logical conclusions. We might look upon the people of the world as so many mice on a treadmill. The trainers -the politicians-stand apart.

War is with us always. Sometimes the location changes for variety but as long as there are those who willingly carry a gun in some blind sense of patriotism, controlled by trainers who stand outside the cage, war will always be with us; accepted as a proper means of settling differences.

Hunger and famine are also products of our own stupidity. Having spoken with many who travel the world, we are continuously told of tractors that rust in fields, and grain that sits spoiling on docks because there is no transportation to deliver it where it is needed. Countries where famine is a part of life are spending precious borrowed dollars on nuclear technology. It does not take an expert to predict, that, as long as these conditions remain the same, hunger and famine will always be with us.

Even here at home we continue down the fool's path. We complain of rising prices yet we continue to buy. Again it does not take an expert to see that as long as people buy rising prices will continue. Strikes for higher wages, and greater winter layoffs go hand in hand. So many of us sit back and say "what can one person do? It has always been this way." Again, it does not take an expert to show "what is accepted, will continue."

If I could give a magic formula for 1975 it would go something like this. We all have choices; each new day presents 24 new ones. Each one of us, as individuals, makes his own choice every hour: choices of acceptance, of inaction, or, the hardest choice of all, of action. Any action, no matter how small, creates change, and change, because it is unknown, is something we all fear. Not everyone is a banner waver or a front row marcher, but everyone can make a contribution.

We have all been brainwashed over the years, like mice on a treadmill. "Poor little mice, they go round and round and get nowhere." We have been amditioned to believe that only the experts know the answers; yet the same problems continue from year to year.

Getting involved does not mean having to be out front with a placard. Getting involved can start right in your own living room just by really listening to the evening news; really seeing what is happening to this fragile world you live on. Everytime "you" make a purchase you're getting involved.

When you accept things as they are you have made your choice. This old world of ours may be far from perfect, but it's the only world we have. We have to care about it.

In our own community we see that Rev. Ken Campbell is in the thick of things again. This time someone's picking out his brief remarks over some nude drawings by a Grade 13 art class. So many times side issues are pushed forward to conceal the truth of the Education today has many flaws, as Rev. Campbell has been trying to publicly show. It is obvious to anyone who speaks to the youth today that they are snowed with an endless stream of over-information, most of which has little practical application. So often extremes are pushed forward in the name of education. The controversy over sex education is pushed forward to disguise the real issue.

No one should object to a student learning the biological method by which we and other members of the animal kingdom reproduce themselves. Humans, however, manage to put a new twist on things. We become so hung-up on one issue that we overlook the basics.

Rev. Campbell was quoted in the Star as saying "It's obvious from the nude drawings in Oakville and Instructions in intercourse complained of, that these things do exist."

We hope Rev. Campbell will forgive our tongue-in-cheek thought when we have to agree that nudes and intercourse do exist and probably each deserves an honorable mention within the education system. It is unfortunate, however, that the students have difficulty reading let alone spelling and they have to waste precious time spending disproportionate hours learning "what comes naturally", I doubt whether the Grade 9 who was reported to have to name the various parts of the female and male genitalia, and how each part functions during intercourse would be able to spell let alone pronounce half of the words without help. Some of the educators just can't see the forest for the trees. Looks like we're off and running into

To the Editor of the Herald: You ask me what I think of the Herald. It is the best printed paper that goes into my house, likewise the quality of the pictures. I congratulate you on your effort. The Toronto Globe and Mail is abominable in these respects and has been a day late for months.

I left Georgetown in 1910 and, until five years ago, often visited there but there is nothing left for me there (now that all the McGibbons have gone) except many nostalgic memories.

As you can imagine there is little of interest in the paper for me, as far as people are concerned, but it is a splendid weekly. I should add I knew Mr. Blehn and the two editors before him.
