Liberals losing their members

BY DON O'HEARN
Queen's Park Bureau
Of The Herald

The Liberals are ending up in a strange situation. Apparently from opinion polls and other indications they are on a crest. Yet at the same time they are losing some of their best members.

Jim Bullbrook of Sarnia confirmed some time ago that he wouldn't be running another election. Then word got out that Donald Patterson, the 10-year veteran from Essex South would be retiring with the next election. And now Donald Deacon, member for York Center, deputy leader of the party and leadership candidate against Bob Nixon has said that he also will be dropping out with the next election.

The 54-year-old Deacon could be the biggest loss of all. Patterson is an intelligent man who has steadily done his homework. Bullbrook has had moments of brilliance. But Deacon has probably been the most dedicated man in the entire Liberal caucus. He has travelled the province constantly, has dug up candidates and generally has worked, worked, and worked. Oddly, the same reason money appears to be behind the retirement of these three outstanding members.

Patterson is a merchant who runs general stores and who probably has spent more on representing his constituents than he ever took out of his job as an MPP.

Bullbrook has such a successful law practice, together with a growing family, that he simply can't afford to be a member any longer.

Deacon is a member of his family's brokerage firm and immediately gave up his partnership on becoming elected. Since then he has been living on his capital and with inflation, plus the substantial chunk of money he put into his leadership campaign this has shrunk.
