Ombudsman to protect rights

At the swearing-in ceremonies for Arthur Maloney, Ontario's first Ombudsman, Premier William Davis said the office was created to maintain an overriding concern and respect for the rights, freedoms and security of the individual.

"Because of the larger complexities now facing each individual in today's world, there is a greater need for reinforcement of our belief in these rights in a proven and practical manner," said the premier.

Mr. Davis said it will be the role of the Ombudsman to investigate recommendations, decisions and actions committed or omitted in the administration of provincial government.

"Ontario has a proud and enviable record of upholding and defending the rights of the individual. The Ontario Human Rights Code, now 15 years old, prescribes in law certain moral principles governing the behaviour of individuals towards each other and of institutions toward the individual."

"What we seek in the creation of an Ombudsman for all Ontario is still greater accessibility for the individual to the security of freedom under existing law in a democratic society," said Mr. Davis.

The premier said it is "not surprising" that the appointment of Arthur Maloney "has been greeted with wide public accord."

"Mr. Maloney, a native Ontarian, is one of Canada's most distinguished citizens. He is from a family renowned for its contribution to the public life of Canada and Ontario. His father was a Federal Member of Parliament, and his brother and grandfather were both members of this Legislature. Mr. Maloney himself served as a Member of Parliament of Canada from 1957 to 1962. Above all else, Mr. Maloney has distinguished himself by his outstanding service to the cause of justice in this country, both in its advocacy and its defence," said Mr. Davis.
