

HEY MISTER, GET THE MESSAGE?

Drivers along Terra Cotta road had an opportunity Thursday to quench their thirst with lemonade and their hunger with chocolate chip cookies. The enterprising boys who set up the roadside refreshment stand were

Robert Vonzuben, 9, and his six-year-old brother David. Also helping was a friend from Thornhill, Curtis Hermann, 9. The boys reported that there was "good business."

Halton Hills library lags behind others

While the council, the library board and the citizens wrangle over what to do about library facilities in Halton Hills, a recent report in the Ontario Library Review Magazine shows that Halton Hills falls far behind comparable libraries in the service it offers local residents.

The report, which is part of an annual report accompanying the fiscal report, covers the first 10 months of 1976. It shows that the Halton Hills library was open 5564 hours during that period and circulated 182,546 books and periodicals. While Halton Hills has a full time staff of seven adults and 4 part-time people, Richmond Hill has 13 full-time employees and five part-time people. The 1976 statistics showed that Richmond Hill had 5.75 professional librarians while Halton Hills has, and still has, only one.

During the first ten of last year Richmond Hill received $403,016 while Halton Hills received $233,280. Of that money Halton Hills contributed $4.76 per capita while Richmond Hill residents paid $9.32 per capita.

A 1974 survey prepared by the provincial government of 122 libraries in Ontario serving populations of 10,000 or more showed that although Halton Hills ranked 71st in relative wealth, it was 97th in relative local support. Absolute local support has increased substantially since that time in all communities, and it will require another government survey to prove that our position has improved even though we spend more dollars annually on our library.

Besides being open an average of 16.4 hours longer each week than Halton Hills libraries, the Richmond Hill library offers a reference collection of 3,687 volumes and has a government document room especially for the maps, charts, and documents it has on hand.
