came to the ministry by way of the science portfolio. Prior to being appointed to this position Mr. Milne was parliamentary secretary to Communications Minister Jeanne Sauve. In that post, he took an active part in getting a program underway to improve northern communication. "I've followed the energy issue and the northern pipeline debate for at least 10 years and I've travelled extensively throughout the north, so I'm really satisfied with the post," Mr. Milne said.

Of his new post, Mr. Milne said, "It'll be a fairly demanding one, handling a number of sensitive issues."

The ministry is now trying to settle native land claims in the Northwest Territories and drawing up legislation for an Alcan gas pipeline.

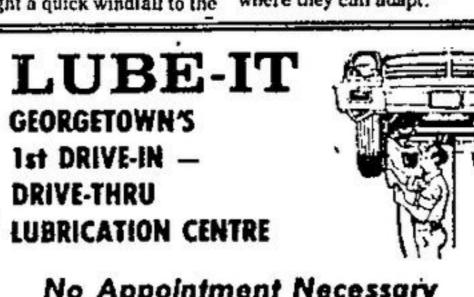

"We have to move very quickly on land-claims because the Alcan pipeline is due to begin in three years," Mr. Milne said. The pipeline, which is to run from the north shore of Alaska through the Yukon and parts of British Columbia and Alberta, is to be completed in 1984.

Mr. Milne is a proponent of bringing development to the north only if it benefits the native Indians and Eskimos living in the Region on a long-term basis. He said Canada can learn from the Alaska pipeline experience, which brought a quick windfall to the natives, but few lasting bene-

"The majority of native people favor development as long as it doesn't run right on top of them," he said. "I think they realize they have to change from a traditional way of life to a wage-earning life, but it has to be done at a rate where they can adapt."
