Rotary can help unity

Rotarians as leaders can play an important role in resolving Canada's unity crisis, Everett Biggs told the Rotary Club of Toronto Friday.

In his speech, Mr. Biggs talked about the problems facing Canada, and the need to face them and solve them with a positive determination.

"We are passing through a traumatic time in our history, but it will pass," he said.

Mr. Biggs, who is a candidate for the federal PC nomination in the riding of Brampton-Georgetown, said the recent criticism of the RCMP are the result of "loose and indifferent administration" on the part of the federal government.

"I believe many in the federal government are willing to let the RCMP 'take the rap' for their own shortcomings," he added.

Mr. Biggs supported the idea of giving, in law, additional powers to the RCMP security division. But he said this must be done through debate in the House of Commons. No one, from the prime minister down, can be allowed to disregard the law, he said.

The current situation in Canada has been growing for the past ten years, according to Mr. Biggs.

"It has been fed by left-wing tendencies, economic mismanagement, arrogant confrontation in leadership and the over-reliance on big government," he said.

Part of the problem in government spending is due to an ever-growing bureaucracy, Mr. Biggs said. He pointed out that the areas of responsibility in federal and provincial government have become less well-defined recently, causing unnecessary duplication, which in turn causes unnecessary spending.

Mr. Biggs said that as part of his personal philosophy, he is opposed to "the ever-increasing subjugation of the private sector through a tax load and regulatory processes that in my opinion are weakening the economic and social fabric of the country." "National unity is the problem," he said, "but the economy to a large degree is the solution."

Course response 'exciting'

Bill Evdokimoff, publisher of the Halton Hills Herald, is extremely pleased that The Herald can again sponsor the world-famous Dale Carnegie Course, and says the announcement last week has created tremendously favorable interest.

This is the third time The Herald has sponsored this course and it is exciting to see such response, Mr. Evdokimoff says.

The class is filling fast and should start ahead of schedule. There is a limited enrollment.

While the class is being formed, speakers and instructors are available to speak to local clubs and organizations. Local companies have used Dale Carnegie staff in past for motivational workshop meetings when they are available.

Mr. Evdokimoff says the ability to speak convincingly, participation in individual or group communications is an essential part of the course training.

Problem solving, decision making and controlling tension will also be covered by the course.

Head named for manor

Jack Charlton, 56, of Milton, has been named administrator of Halton Centennial Manor effective January 1. He replaces Stanley Allen who is retiring.

Mr. Charlton has been the assistant administrator at the Manor since 1967. He was one of 21 applicants for the post.

Prior to moving to the manor as the assistant administrator at P.L. Robertson Manufacturing Company as a machinist and supervisor.

He has served 11 years on the board of directors of Milton and District hospital and was a charter member of the Milton Optimists club, serving as president 1968-69. In 1970, he was Lieutenant Governor of Zone 2.

Mr. Charlton is a member of Branch 136 of the Royal Canadian Legion and served on the executive committee for three years.

He is the past-president of the Region Three of the Ontario Association of Homes for the Aged.
