Hiroshima posting remembered

By MAGGIE HANNAH

Mr. Ryder was a radiation safety officer with the Canadian Army and hist missed being sent to Australia in 1956 when the first hydrogen bomb was tested there.

Japanese surrendered," he says, "but there is evidence now that it wasn't necessary. The Japanese would have surrendered only they were having trouble getting it organ-

One of the things which surprised Mr. Ryder when he went to Japan was the lack of hitterness shown by the Japanese people toward their former enemies.

"We could talk about Hiroshima," he says, "but not about Pearl Harbor. They were genuinely ashamed of that because they had done it. Hiroshima was our problem and they weren't sensitive ahout it.

"The British wouldn't send a prisoner of war back into Japan if that's where he'd been a prisoner," he says, "but the Australians had no such reservations. They seemed to be able to take it for granted that men who had been prisoners would not be out for vengance if they went back. And the Japanese also seemed to be able to overlook how they had been trained to consider us during the war. The war was forgolten by the time I got

"Their training was very different from ours," he says, "very militaristic. It showed up in strange places because military rank had had a social significance too."

One of the men working in the British Command Headquarters in Kure while Mr. Ryder was based there doing repairs on Canadian equipment damaged in Korea, was a former Japanese officer named Kitani.

"The man was a genius," Mr. Ryder says, "but we couldn't make him a lead hand over the Jpanese repair crews because he abused his power with the other men. They had held no rank in the Japanese forces, but he had been a sergeant, or something like that, and it had given him rank privileges.

Mr. Ryder chuckles when asked if he now sells Japanesemade televisions because he was impressed by their skill when he was in Japan.

"No. 1 sell them because I haven't any choice," he says. "I carried Canadian products until the unions wiped them out and all the Canadian manufacturers either went out of business or moved to the American plants their firms owned. The Japanese make the better sets than the Americans so I carry their products now that there are no longer any Canadian

New vacation plans offer flexible travel

MEMPHIS, TENN ..-Travel packages generally offer vacationers both a bar gain on prices and the convenience of having all arrangements - for transportation, lodging, attractions and transfers -- made with a sample phone call or visit to a travel agency.

The primary drawbacks reported by travelers on package vacations are the restrictions placed on departures, arrivals and time spent in each location.

Now, however, a new series of economy-priced travel packages called Holiday Inn Adventures has been introduced at more than 1,200 Holiday Inn locations around the world, offering travelers a degree of freedom most package tours don't.

ties and following a vogue current in the 18th century - the virtue of studying Roman ruins on the spot. He spent three years there.

Even today, when Britain celebrates the 250th anniversary of his birth on July 3, 1728, his recreations of Greek and Roman models are still copied; and he has left the stamp of his particular style on a number of existing buildings throughout England and Scotland. Many of his finest houses are now open to the public.

From his return to London in 1757 Robert Adam designed many important buildings, and a great number of them can still be viewed. Stroll down London's Whitehall to look at the Screen of the Admiralty (1760); a few minutes walk away, near the Strand, is the Royal Society of Arts in John Adam Street; and nearby was once the Adelphi development now represented by just a few houses. To visit grander Adam houses, you need to go no further than stylish Osterley Park House in West London, which can be reached easily by public transport and is open to the public through the National Trust. Originally built in 1577, it was remodelled by Adam: the fine state apartments, occupying three sides of a square, should not be missed, for they show
