everyday

Many meat processing plants have excess production capacity. Over the past few months Loblaw's has been working with one of these manufacturers to fill their excess capacity with a line of no-name, pre-packaged meats. Why? Because, by utilizing existing manufacturing facilities to their potential, meat products can be produced at a lower cost - which means a better price concession to Loblaw's, which in turn we can pass on to you in the form of lower packaged meat prices! By helping the manufacturer to be as efficient as possible; by packaging meat in larger quantities (2 lb. sizes for example); and by selling bacon with the rind on and unspiced (you have to do something); Loblaw's is now able to substantially lower the price of some of the most popular lines of packaged meat. Naturally, meat prices vary greatly over time in response to fluctuating market supplies, but, at Loblaw's we're committed to maintaining these low everyday meat prices just as long as we possibly can. And, most important, on our new no-name meat products - like all of Loblaw's no-name products - we guarantee your satisfaction 100 percent. At Loblaw's we're not just talking about lowering your grocery bill, we're doing something about it!
