Twiss is Player of the Month

Ron Twiss, one of the Georgetown Raiders' steady Eddies, has been selected as the team's Player of Month for March.

Twiss has played most of the season on defense. During the playoff series against the Thorold Athletics coach Gerry Inglis experimented with using Twiss at forward.

Actually Twiss has played forward for most of his hockey career. However, towards the end of the Thorold series and for the first part of the final against the Port Elgin Sunocos, Inglis has moved Twiss back to defence.

Playing alongside veteran Bill Currie, Twiss has looked more at home on the blue-line. He has good size and he likes to use the body.

His background of playing forward also enables him to carry the puck well and he also has a good eye around the net.

Twiss has been one player throughout the year that Inglis could count on game in and game out. He has not had many spectacular showings, but he has also never had an atrocious outing. His play is always the same and very efficient.

The big blueliner also has displayed that the move from junior hockey "B" hockey to Intermediate "A" can be made very smoothly.

Twiss is definitely a Gerry Inglis type of hockey player. He's big, he likes to hit and he also has been a good student of using his stick to its best advantage.

Twiss' durability and versatility make him one of the Raiders' most valuable assets. His young age also means that he should be in red and white for many years to come.

Twiss joins fine company. Previous Players of the Month have been Ray Tonelli, Juri Kudrasovs, Ray Evans, Peter McDuffe and Colin Gordon.

Ron Twiss has been selected the Georgetown Raiders' Player of the Month for March. The former Milton Flyer has had an outstanding rookie campaign patrolling the blue-line for the Raiders.

KEY JUNIOR

Last year Twiss was one of the key members of Inglis' Milton Flyers team in the Central Junior "B" league.

When Inglis returned to his post as mentor of the Raiders one of the first players he talked about acquiring was Twiss.

Sunocos win the toss

Georgetown would then have to win the sixth game here to stay alive.

NOTHOMER

According to the pundits up north Port Elgin has not been that much of a homer team this year. Apparently in the series against the Collingwood Shipbuilders, of which one Port Elgin newspaper said the Sunocos played as close to perfection as is humanly possible (don't tell the Soviets), the Sunocos were as good on the road as they were at home.

However, it is hard to believe the Sunocos do not get a lift playing at home.

Their fans are behind them 100 per cent and are as vocal as any fans anywhere. The arena is also so different from the other rinks around the league (except for possibly Orangeville) that that would also seem to give them an advantage.

Raider general manager Jack Handy expressed a little surprise when his club took the second game up there on Sunday.

"I think our guys can play in that rink now," he said afterwards. "They can't play the same passing game they play here. It's dump it in and grind."

The small rink in Port Elgin (very similar to Memorial Arena here) seems to give the Raiders one advantage.

It's easier to hit in a small arena and the much bigger Raiders have been doing most of the hitting in the series.
