Bump for life

Acton High School students once again proved their determination to work for a worthwhile cause recently by raising more than $4,000 towards the fight against cystic fibrosis in the annual Bump for Life marathon. This is the third such marathon sponsored by the Georgetown Kinsmen Club in conjunction with the Acton High School student council and teachers. Organizers credit numerous sponsors including the Georgetown A&P, William Neilson Co. Ltd., the 7-Up Corporation, The Dairy Queen, Mr. Donut, Mr. Submarine, Quality Packers and Borders with keeping the dancers fed while Records-On-Wheels and Gama Sound disc jockeys Gary Tobin and Marty Glaude provided the music to keep their feet moving for 10 long hours. Dancers amassed a total of $414.14 per hour in pledges. Mike Ashley was the boy with the highest number of pledges at $7.98 an hour while Carol Waskauk and Beth Scott shared the honours for the girls with pledges of $19.19 an hour each. In the past three years the students have enabled the Georgetown club to donate about $13,000 to the cystic fibrosis fight.

Drury tender OK

The Halton board of education has accepted a tender from Martin-Stewart Contracting Company for $3.6 million for the construction of the addition and alterations to E.C. Drury High School. The total budget for the project is $4,520,000 of which $54,000 will be returned as a rebate on federal sales tax. This is an increase from what had originally been budgeted, superintendent of business and finance Bruce Lindley said. Mr. Lindley said the increase was due to an increase in the area of the school, in the alterations, and in the equipment allocation. The awarding of the tender is subject to the approval of the ministry of education and the Ontario Municipal Board, which must approve financing of the project.

Helping Hands wants help

Helping Hands is again in desperate need of volunteer drivers to help transport four area residents to Toronto General Hospital for dialysis treatment twice a week. The patients must be taken down Wednesdays and Saturdays to arrive by 9:30 or 10 a.m. and picked up the following day for the return trip. The hospital pays a transportation allowance. Co-ordinator Barb Stephens wants sufficient drivers to arrange a rotating schedule so no one person will be asked to be excessively generous with their time. Interested drivers please call Mrs. Stephens at 877-5920.

Candidates discuss election issues with Georgetown high students

Democrats are interested in a strong economy because a strong economy will pay for good social programs. He pointed to the problem in Georgetown with the closing of the Duntar plant and the resulting loss of jobs; the decision to close the plant was made in the United States, and he said this is an example of the need for Canada to exert more control over foreign investment.

Libertarian candidate Joe Yundt talked about his party's policy of reducing the size of government to the three functions of protection of the countries' borders through armed forces, provision for internal security through the operation of a police force, and a system of justice through a legal system.

"The government is far too big and exerts far too much control over our lives," he said. The Libertarian Party would like to abolish laws governing prostitution, gambling and marijuana, he said.

"WE'RE ADULTS" "We don't think the government should regulate our morality," he said. "We're adults - we can do it ourselves."

In his rebuttal, Mr. Moulton said Canada's record in terms of control of foreign investment is the worst in the world. He disagreed with allegations that the NDP is opposed to competition in the private sector.

Mr. McDermid said the Conservatives' energy policy is designed to make Canada self-sufficient in energy by 1989. He applauded the NDP for its "worthwhile ideals, but they don't tell us how they're going to accomplish them."

Mr. Milne defended the Liberals' unity platform during his rebuttal.

"If anyone has copped out on unity, it is Joe Clark," he said. "My prime minister and our party have continually stood for the rights of Canadians in language and other areas."

The only sticky point in the first all-candidates' meeting was a series of questions on capital punishment, which included asking whether the candidate was opposed to or in favor of capital punishment.

whether he would vote as his party directed, and in the case of a free vote, whether he would vote according to his conscience, or as his constituents directed. All the candidates objected to the request to limit their answers to yes or no, and chairman Tom Ramataursingh exercised his prerogative as chairman to allow each candidate to briefly state his views on capital punishment.

ONLY CANDIDATE John McDermid was the only candidate who supported the return of capital punishment. Mr. Yundt and Mr. Milne said they would vote as their constituents wished if the issue was brought back to parliament. Mr. Moulton said he is strongly opposed to capital punishment, and he has been talking to voters about it, but he feels there are more important issues in the election.

The candidates were also asked their views on the decriminalization of marijuana. Mr. McDermid said the decriminalization of marijuana is a non-issue as far as he is concerned because all three major party leaders have said they are in favor of taking simple possession of marijuana out of the Criminal Code, and putting it under the Food and Drug Act, which would result in a lesser penalty, and a clean record.

Mr. Milne said as the proposal stands, a conviction for simple possession would not result in a mark on the person's record, or as a block against entering into certain career areas. This does not mean the legalization of the use of marijuana, he reminded the students, and penalties for trafficking would be as tough or tougher than they are now.

Mr. Moulton said he agrees with the proposed changes in law regarding simple possession which would make simple possession a civil offence instead of a criminal offence, such as a violation of the Liquor Licence Act operates.

Mr. Yundt said that as far as the Libertarian party is concerned it comes down to the issue of "Who are the government to tell us what we can do?"

One student asked the candidates to outline the differences between their parties.

"If I thought there was a difference between the other three parties, I wouldn't be here," Mr. Yundt said. "I haven't heard a politician in the past 10 years say he was going to pay off the Canadian debt."

Mr. Milne said the Liberal party has always stood for "the quality of the individual," for human rights, language rights, and minority rights.

Ross Milne wants Tory apology

sonal, very destructive campaign style. In any event, we are not willing to become involved in that type of race. We will continue to talk about the issues that face the people of Brampton-Georgetown and on election day the voters can decide which type of campaign they prefer."

The Milne campaign is demanding an apology for Mr. McDermid's statement that the Liberal candidate lied.

Richard Weiler, communication director of the Milne campaign said of the ruling in a prepared statement, "We are disappointed with what we consider to be the highly irresponsible behaviour of our Conservative opponent to this very serious matter. In particular the Conservative candidate was quoted in the April 25 edition of the Georgetown Herald making personal derogatory and untrue statements about the character of Mr. Milne and the conduct of his campaign committee."

WANTED APOLOGY "Now that the facts of this matter have been examined by the appropriate office, we fully expect a withdrawal of all comments in this regard by the Conservative candidate as well as a public apology to Ross Milne and his campaign."

Mr. Weiler also denied a charge by Mr. McDermid made in the same article that Milne campaign workers had removed copies of the election tabloid from copies of the Brampton Guardian already in street boxes.

When contacted by the Herald, Mr. McDermid declined to comment on the matter, and said his campaign manager would answer questions on the matter.

A spokesman for Mr. McDermid said no comment on the matter will be issued until their office has received a copy of the official ruling by the election commissioner.

Complex approved with 6-5 vote his clients' promise that the complex will be open to all, rather than just to visitors of Croatian origin.

Last September, concern was also expressed over a proposal to use a small portion of the site as a cemetery. Neighbors questioned the wisdom of allowing such land uses in the area.

Coun. Armstrong reported that the cemetery proposal has yet to be resolved and speculated that it will likely be omitted from the development agreement to be jointly signed by municipal and Croatian officials.

JUSTIFY CONCERNS Asked to explain why he voted in favor of the project last week, Coun. Armstrong acknowledged that neighboring landowners may well have justifiable concerns over the crowds expected to visit the complex, related to traffic and dust problems.

He pointed out, however, that the town will be protecting their interest and privacy through a co-operative control that will be exercised on the proposed land uses.

Meanwhile, he said, the Custody itself is already a "fait accompli", with some buildings and recreational areas already established at the site. Co-operation, Coun. Armstrong stressed, is the key to meeting the needs of the applicants while at the same time guarding residents against any form of disturbance.

Coun. Serjeantson declined to comment on the issue before council, but noted that many of the concerns she heard expressed last fall remain unanswered. She said she will be consulting with town officials and police representatives before making her final decision on the matter.
