

Bang-o-rama 1979 is a blast

Whaddaya mean dizzy? These young girls don't seem the least bit concerned about the spins as they fly happily around on the Bang-o-rama

"Scrambler." The madly spinning ride was one of the many popular Bang-o-rama events.

In spite of all the events scheduled, the midway, and all the other excitement of Bang-O-Rama, it all leads up to one thing — the fireworks display in the evening. Attendance was good throughout the day at the Bang-O-Rama, in spite of chilly breezes, but the biggest crowd of all came in time to ooh and aah over the spectacular displays of noise and flashing lights, which included the traditional waterfall and the Canadian flag.

The Georgetown detachment of the Halton Hills Fire Department put up quite a show with their waterball fight at Bang-O-Rama Monday. With the light breeze that was blowing, a number of unwary spectators found themselves getting an extra shower.

It may not be the flying trapeze but these daring young kids on the swing ride at Bang-O-Rama seem to have their fair share of fun and thrills.

This father and daughter team got their money's worth as they got an aerial view of the fun and few good spins aboard the paratrooper ride.

Most people at Bang-o-rama seemed to have a happier time than 10-year-old Cason Bulkema. Little Cason is doing his best to convince his Dad that he deserves another turn on the car ride. Dad has ideas of his own.

Glyn Owen can hardly wait to sink his teeth into that ball of sugary fluff known as cotton candy. Wisps of candy floating in the air caught on tents, clothing and in hair leaving a sticky mess behind.

Herald photos by Michael Hollett
and Lori Taylor