SWEET AND SOUR MANDARIN BARBECUE SAUCE FOR SPARERIBS

- 1 11 oz. can Japanese Mandarin Oranges, chopped into chunks

 - 1 large onion, chopped
 - 1 clove garlic, crushed
 - 1 small green pepper, chopped
 - 1/2 cup packed brown sugar
 - 1/2 cup ketchup
 - 1 tsp. Worcestershire sauce
 - 1 tsp. salt
 - 1 tsp. pepper
 - 2 tsp. dry mustard
- Brown onion, garlic and green pepper in oil in skillet. Add the rest of the ingredients and simmer for 15 minutes.

Fresh herbs spice home

Serious chefs enjoy having their own herb gardens, from which they can pluck bountiful bunches of flavoring, virtually at will.

The ideal situation, of course, is to have a plot of ground outdoors, where basil, rosemary, parsley and a myriad of other subtly sweet, pungent or aromatic plants can grow to their full size.

However, if you're an apartment dweller, or a homeowner who just doesn't have room amid your prize roses for anything more, take heart!

Many of these herbs will grow well and even flourish in a windowsill herb garden. Just make sure they have plenty of light and enough water.

As a bonus, while they're growing, they'll impart a subtle but pervasive perfume.

If you do decide to begin a windowsill herb garden, you can do one of two things.

Either buy packets of seeds and grow your soon-to-be magnificent herb plants from scratch, or buy small plants of the most popular herbs, in the produce department of your supermarket or in a florist shop.

Herbs readily available already potted include chives, basil, parsley and dill.

Either way, before you know it, you will have lush green bundles of flavor sure to enhance any dish!

Use as a basting sauce for spare-ribs.

Serves 4-6 (1 rack of spare-ribs).

Barbecued Chicken, Too

Mandarin Orange spare-ribs sauce is as delicious on barbecued chicken as it is on spare ribs. It provides a rich, appetizing glaze and a tangy flavor.

Indoors or out, barbecues are fun—and canned Mandarin Oranges from Japan make them more flavorful!
