theHERAL Home Newspaper of Halton Hills

Page 4 - THE HERALD, Wednesday, August 8, 1979 A Division of Canadian Newspapers Company Limited

103 Main St. South, Georgetown, L7G-3E5, Ontario WILLIAM EVDORIMOFF, Publisher MICHAEL HOLLETT, Editor

> PHONE ... 877-2201 Second Class Mail Registered Number-0943

Red Cross urgently needs blood

In the midst of the light-hearted spirit of these holiday, summer months Halton Hills residents are again being called upon to help out those in need.

Many Halton Hills residents have already opened their hearts to the plight of the "Boat People" and now the Red Cross have made an urgent appeal for blood donors at a special summer clinic.

Because of a serious blood shortage in this part of Ontario, Red Cross units throughout the area are organizing clinics to try and bolster their supply of life giving blood.

Already hospitals in Toronto have been reduced to delaying elective surgery and Red Cross spokesman could wipeout regional blood supplies.

Locally, the Red Cross clinic will be held next Monday from 1:30 to 8 pm at the Holy Cross auditorium. Dozens of volunteers will be involved in the preparation and running of the clinic.

While the Red Cross does not usually hold summer blood donor clinics the current blood shortage crisis has prompted the breaking of precedence. It's more important than ever that Halton Hills residents get out and give blood at this clinic. If local residents 'don't turn out in significant numbers at Monday's clinic, Halton Hills may find itself in a blood shortage crisis that's especially dangerous during this season of numerous traffic accidents.

SOME CREATIVE EXCUSES ON WHY NOT TO GIVE BLOOD

Through the years Red Cross has had many opportunities to hear creative excuses as to why someone does not want to donate blood. Here are some of the more creative ones collected, along with a scoreboard so that you can assess them yourself,

	•	VERY CREATIVE	NOT BAD	нинг
. 1	"I ran away to the circus when I was ID and I had an "I Love You Ethel" tettoo put on my arm. Now that I'm married to Mildred, I couldn't roll up my sleave in public."
2	"A friend of a sister of a cousin of mine once gave blood and told my cousin's sister, who told me, that it wasn't really all that great, eh, No angols singing. No round of applause. Just a thank you!"
3	"One's time has restraints put upon it, as you might well understand. Tomorrow I have a quoits match at the club and the following day mother has asked that I drive her to the pet canary show. Some of us really don't have the time, you know,"
4.	"Needles, I can't stand needles. Why needles bother me so much that the mere thought of sewing a button on a shirt gives me a rash."
6	"Normally I am most sincere about considering giving blood, I average three considerations every two months," actually. In fact, I'd consider it today but I'm wearing long-sleeved underwear"
0.	"I'd gladly give blood anytime if only the clinics weren't always close to my home and all my friends were there,"
7.	"I'd gladly give blood anytime, you know, except that the clinics always seem to be near my office and none of my triends are ever around."
8.	"I've been told by a modelling school instructor that I have very sexy elbows, and I'm rather discreet about who seas them,"	_
O.	"Yes, well you see, I'm a most energetic person. Tennis every morning, squash on weekends, bit of golf. Can't afford to lose all that energy

Kelso Roberts memorable man

By DON O'HEARN Queen's Park Bureau

Of The Herald Of all the characters of the forties in and around the legislature and provincial politics one stands out in memory: A. Kelso Roberts.

Kelso Roberts, of course, eventually was twice a contender for the party leadership, attorney-general and minister of lands and forests and wound up with a career of some distinction.

Kelso, who had been born in Belleville, moved to the north after graduation from Osgoode Hall and built up a big mining practice. He was a tall, lean man with a map of Ireland of a face and like many Irishmen he had a besetting love of politics and a strong personal conviction that he was bound to lead and rule. He contested Toronto St. Patrick for the Conservatives in 1937 and lost to the sitting Liberal, but he ran again in 1943 and won.

In those days there was practically no chance for the government back-bencher to play a part at all, except for one speech a session in the Throne debate. There weren't the question periods, estimates, private members' hours, free-roaming debates on legislation that keep a member tightly occupied today.

This was quite all right with the other members. The session normally only lasted from 34 to 45 days anyway and this was a time which could be occupied congenially.

usual lives, while the out-of-towners would do a lot of pleasant lobby-sitting (this was there was always a touch that was pre-TV), a lot of strenuous poker or bridge straight Kelso. playing and some quite mild, though perhaps continuous carousing.

But such a life was not for Kelso Roberts. His own opposition he established himself as still another opposition to the government (there already were the CCF. the official opposition, the Liberals and the LPP). He became as ardent a critic of some of its measures as anyone on the opposition side of the house. Nobody minded too much. Members of the government generally laughed with it as "just Kelso", though it obviously irked George Drew, a stern believer in army discipline to whom any breaking of ranks was close to treason.

And he finally broke on the closing day of the 1948 session (the last of that legislature and of the Drew government). There was an important new bill, dealing with compensation for automobile accidents.

Kelso had tried to block it at its first two reading stages (he had a client who would benefit if he could get it made retroactive).

Finally he tried to do the unbeard of and move a motion against it on third reading. Drew, scarlet, rose and turned and said,

"for God's sake SIT DOWN!" The rebel did, and was so offended that he didn't run in that year's election.

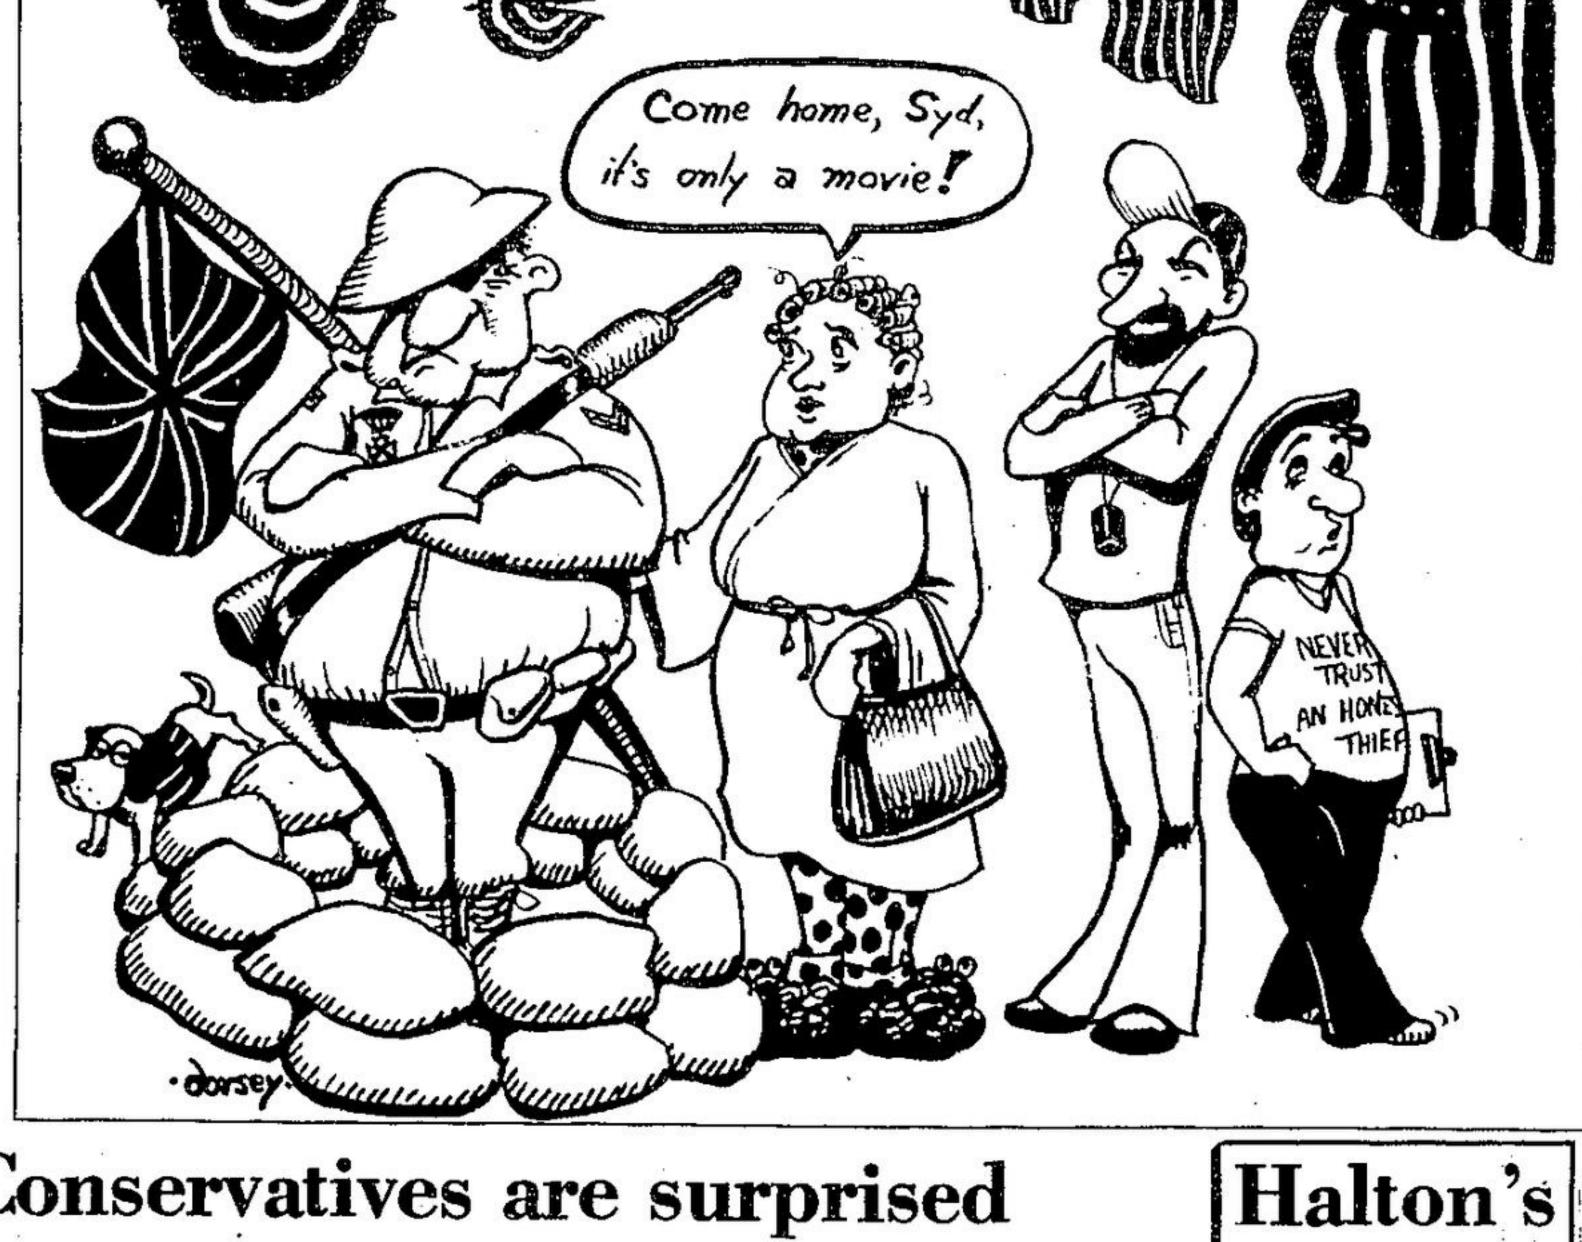

But a few months later he was back contesting the leadership in the Frost-Blackwell convention, where he ran back in the pack.

Then in the early fifties, Leslie Frost brought him into his cabinet (they had been in the First World War and had gone through Osgoode together) and he was a leading government figure until 1966.

As attorney-general he did tend to pack the bench with magistrates whose party loyalty was perhaps stronger than their ability (a practice which did him no harm at all when he nearly beat John Robarts for the leadership in 1961). But generally Toronto members carried on with their his administration was steady enough, and usually abowed a bit of finir. But > Perhaps had he been entering the house today he might have become bored and quit after a term. Members are generally coddled a bit and are tied to the legislative buildings for an interminable six or seven months. He was a rebel in grand styel, and the whole climate today might have been too pallig for him.

> But this is doubtful too - he was not a

Conservatives are surprised by poor economic situation

Ottawa Report

By Stewart

MacLeod Ottawa Bureau

Of The Herald Since I have never understood economics or government finances, perhaps

· I should stay out of this. But, speaking as a layman, I think those economic heavyweights of the Conservative government are beginning to sound a bit silly when, feigning surprise, they complain about the sorry state of the nation's financial You would think they had expected to inherit a veritable goldmine. I though that Treasury Board President Sinclair Stevans looked positively pained when he felt it necessary to go before the cameras and say that the economic situation inherited from the defeated Liberals was "even worse than we expected." The implication was that Canadians shouldn't expect the Tories to implement all their campaign promises right now.

Finance Minister John Crosbie is peddling a similar message. It will, he says, take two or three years of disciplined restraint to pull the country out from under 10 years of Liberal mismanagement. He, too, seemed pained, Now I am not for one moment suggesting the Tories didn't inherit a sorry economic situation, and there are many experts who feel the Liberals were masters of mismanagement. ECONOMIC COLLAPSE

In fact, for the last few years I had been led to believe we were on the verge of economic collapse, led by a misguided government, galloping down the road to ruin. For a time, I was measuring our survival in terms of weeks, not years.

And where did these dire messages come from?: They came from the same Conservative politicians who now are telling us that, surprise, surprise, we shouldn't expect all those campaign goodies because the horrible Grits left them an unexpected mess. In the circumstances, I think it's fair to ask just what the Conservatives did expect to inherit when all the promises were made. Well, we have this view from Crosbie, delivered to the Commons last October. "Economics is a dismal science, but that science has become much more dismal in the last three or four years of this government. It is now so dismal that one does not even like to refer to the economic statistics because the dismalness is so terrible that I do not think the people of Canada can stand much more of it."

Things were so bad, Crosbie suggested, he found them difficult to face "I will only refer to one forecast because I cannot stand to refer to any more."

It was the considered opinion of the future finance minister that the Canadian economy was in a "shambles".

About the same time, Stevens was warning Canadians that their economy was in "chaos". He used such words as "terrible" to describe the situation. SUNSHINE PROMISED

A few days later, Conservative Leader Joe Clark offered the view that the government's handling of the economy would be laughed at if it weren't so sad. He used the world "pitiful".

"What is necessary," he said, "is to have a government of Canhda that is prepared to trust the people of Canada more than this government does." After the next election, we were told, "a new government will break that bad habit and let the sun shine in on the five-year forecasts and projections on which national economic policy is based."

The messages were clear and consistent: Our economy was in ruins, things could not be worse, and our only hope lay in promised conservative incentives, such as $2 billion in tax cuts. Now, it's being suggested that the incentives may have to be delayed because the economic situation is worse than the incoming government expected.

If the situation had indeed deteriorated beyond shambles, chaos and ruin, I think these new ministers at least owe us the courtesy of some new words to describe the current state of our economy. But, as I said, I have never really understood economics.

History

From our files

OUTDOOR PRIVY OUTLAWED

THIRTY YEARS AGO - The day of the "outdoor privy" is almost over in Georgetown. Progress has taken its toll and the installation of a sanitary sewerage . system spelled the death knell of this relic of the horse and buggy days. A new bylaw passed by council at the suggestion of Halton Health Unit puts the kibosh on any future outdoor installations and to new generations of Georgetowners, Chic Sale will be as antiquated as oil lamps, high buttom shoes or the ukelele.

The tax rate in Esquesing Township has been set for 42 mills for 1949, an increase of 5 mills over the 1948 rate. This does not include trustee rates for school purposes, which are extra.

YOUTHS ON WANTED LIST TWENTY YEARS AGO - On Thursday August 6, 75 4-H Club Members and 'five Club Leaders travelled to Toronto on the annual Halton County 4-H bus trip. At the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation the members were present for the Farm Broadcast at 12:30 over CBL. The members were then introduced to "The Craigs" and three of them - Margaret Lawson, Eugene Coulter, and Russell Murray, were interviewed by Mr. Harold Dodds of the CBC. Local people will remember Mr. Dodds as a former manager of the Georgetown branch of the Halton Co-Op Supplies.

Possibility of a camp of 150 trailers locating in Esquesing Township was veteod Monday, when, at a special meeting of the township council, a decision was made to restrict such an establishment to a designated area. The proposed area for the camp is a motel location which does not allow for such expansion.

From the Herald Classified column: For Sale - 3 bedroom almost new, solid brick, semi-detached bungalow. Aluminum storms and screens, fenced and sodded back yard, other extras, close to schools and shopping. Full price -$11,300.

FIRE DESTORY COTTAGE

TEN YEARS AGO - Georgetown area family lost their possessions last Wednesday afternoon when fire burned their rented cottage to the ground. The blaze started in a barn located next to the RR3, Georgetown home of Mr. and Mrs. Wilgard Duguay. The barn was also levelled. Hay and farm equipment in the barn were lost. There has been no estimate of damage.

Halton County councillors will make a pitch for a separate Halton regional government when they confront four Ontario cabinet ministers at a special meeting August 14 at the Riviera Club in Norval. Municipal Affairs Minister Darcy McKeough, Energy and Resources Minister George Kerr, Education minister William Davis and provincial treasurer Charles McNaughton will attend the afternoon meeting. Premier John Robarts may also attend. For 12-year-old James Virgin of 54 Market Street, the summer of '69 will be a season never quite forgotten. He saw man land on the moon and got his first summer job. And it's the job that's really different. Jamie swims and performs with the trained dolphins at Marineland and Game Farm, Niagara Falls, Canada. He's Canada's "Boy on a dolphin".

RABID FOX ATTACK ONE YEAR AGO - A 21-year-old Toronto man was killed after he was struck by a Canadian National Rallways freight train on the Georgetown trestle Thursday and fell about 110 feet into the Credit River Ravine.

Two dogs are under quarantine and a number of others also face the possibility of quarantine as a result of contact with a suspected rabid fox on the 8th Line just south of Georgetown. An anonymous phone call tipped off Halton Regional Police to a cache of 14 sticks of stolen dynamite hidden on the Limehouse Church property. The dynam ite, which police said was stolen three years ago, had not deteriorated sufficiently to affect its explosive power.

MPPs eagerly awaiting on mind development control

Queen's Park

By Derek Nelson

By DEREK NELSON Queen's Park Bureau Of The Herald

TORONTO - One of the more eagerly awaited reports from the potpourri of special inquiries going on around here is Dr. Dan Hill's look into mind development organizations.

It should be ready by October, although so far there's no hint of how Hill's thinking is developing.

He was commissioned to do the study, "a thorough review of all available information" on the subject, by Attorney-General Roy Murtry last fall.

That included reading the government's files, as well as receiving submissions and interviewing members of the public.

But he was to do it privately to prevent the inquiry, which is highly informal and doesn't require swearing of oaths, from becoming a circus.

Those who favor the inquiry hope it will lead to some kind of control over those mind development groups that they perceive of as being mind-bending, and hence harmful.

NEXTSTEP McMurtry's terms of reference or

Hill said the government has "received particular expressions of concern in relation to the affects of mind development practices of sects and cults: - on the mental and physical health of members - apprehension of physical or psychological coercion recruitment methods and business practices used by such groups - need for an consumer protection machinery in this area -and the practice of deprograming. Perhaps Hill's observations will be useful. Or perhaps not. There is a nagging

Under his terms of reference he is not allowed to make "adverse finding of fact in relation to any identifiable individuals or groups." TWO TARGETS

Which kind of limits the impact he might have, especially since it is widely known the government's main targets are People Looking Inward (PSI) and Sciento-

Hill can, however, recommend a full public inquiry or "any other steps" he feels are needed.

Which is plain worrisome. We might end up with a bill like the one proposed by opposition MPP John Sweeney (L-Kitchener-Wilmet), which basically hands some mind development organizations over to government control.

Not all, mind you, because of the curious separation we make in this country between God-oriented mind development (United Church, Moonles) and cults (PSI, yoga).

And it is difficult to touch the Godoriented for fear of charges of religious persecution, ONLY HOPE

In fact, all such groups rely on the same principle, faith. To persecute one is to persecute all.

The one real hope of the Hill inquiry is the man himself, a long-time human rights activist and defender of minority rights. With luck he'll be able to draw the fine line between investigating cultist thinking which is no-one's business but the participants, and actual physical practices that might prove unsavery (such as the use of hypnotism).

theHERALD

A DIVISION OF CANADIAN NEWSPAPERS COMPANY LTD 103 Main St. South, Georgetown, L74-165 WILLIAM EVDOKIMOFF Publisher & General Manager MICHAEL HOLLETT Managing Editor LARRY N. MARTIN

Advertising Sales Manager

Phone 877-2201

Second Class Mail Registered No. 0743

1976 - Second Best All-Round - Best Sports 1974 - Best News & Features 1975 - Best News & Features 1975 - Best Composition & Layout 1975 - Best Editorial Page

advertiser agrees that the publisher shall not be fiable for damages arising out of errors in adverlisements beyond the amount paid for the space actually occupied by that portion of the advertisement in which the error occurred, whether such error is due to the negligence of its servants or otherwise . and there shall be no liability for non-insertion of any advertisement beyond the amount paid for such advertisement,

Advertising is accepted on the condition that the National Advertising Offices Thomson fluiding

340 Cathcart St , Montreal, P Q