Antique paper a hidden extra

Vicki Juby of Georgetown recently purchased a copy of the Guelph Mercury, affiliated with the Herald, which advertised 200 acres of land for $3,500 and predicts the imminent collapse and disappearance of the Conservative party of Canada. The newspaper is dated April, 1884 when the Guelph Daily Mercury was still the Guelph Weekly Mercury.

information about it.

News stories of the time also fascinate Mrs. Juby. Wondering is Guelph was "a Tory town", she noted the 1884 paper was busily predicting the rapidly-approaching death of the Conservative party.

A major local story of the time involved a doctor accused of violating the temperance act. In the paper is a long letter from the doctor stating his innocence.

ORIGINAL

Because the paper is in such good condition, Mrs. Juby at first doubted it was real, although the frame seemed to be quite old. She felt a paper that old, even if it were covered by glass, would have yellowed more than this one had.

"I thought it must be a reprint," she explained. Mercury staff investigated and assured her it was a genuine 1884 paper.

"I'd like to put it somewhere but I'd like to preserve it," she said. She is hoping to find out how to preserve the fragile document while showing it at the same time.

It was a hidden extra stuck in an antique picture frame Mrs. Juby purchased during a rainy afternoon of antique hunting.

She was visiting Kirkfield, a town southeast of Orillia, when she stopped to browse in an antique store. An antique picture frame caught her notice and she bought it, not paying attention to the scrap of newspaper visible behind the frame.

Though the picture frame interested Mrs. Juby more at the time of purchase, it now is the antique paper which interests her.

Advertising prices are fascinating in the old Weekly Mercury, said Mrs. Juby. She pointed out 200 acres of land were selling for just $3,500 and household goods went for a fraction of today's rates.

ADVERTISING
 Mercury advertising of the 1884 variety is providing Mrs. Juby with important information, as well as surprising prices. The Juby's own an old organ, which after taking the back off the instrument they discovered to be an old William Bell Organ. But the Juby's had come to a halt in their search to determine its age until the old newspaper came through. An advertisement for William Bell Organs discovered in the paper has given them a new club by telling them where the company was located.

"We want to find out how old it is," said Mrs. Juby. The Bell Company has gone out of business but Mrs. Juby is hoping somebody in Guelph will be able to provide some
