

Local police will investigate Milton stag

Halton Region Crown Attorney James Treleaven has decided to announce an investigation into allegations that prostitutes were hired for a stag to raise money for a minor hockey team in Milton.

The allegations stem from a front-page story in a Milton weekly newspaper that alleges acts of prostitution took place at a stag organized by the parents of some members of the Milton Minor Hockey Association. The stag was held to raise money for some of the parents to attend a hockey tournament in Rhode Island.

The announcement of the investigation follows a stormy meeting of Halton Regional Police Commission last Thursday when members of the commission denounced the story. Milton Mayor Don Gordon, a regional representative on the commission, said the weekly "printed lies" and dealt with "rumors, innuendoes and characters assassinations."

Police Chief James Harding accused the newspaper of "irresponsible journalism", and said the police department had received no complaints about the stag.

"If someone feels something has gone awry in Milton, they can make a complaint and it will be investigated," Oakville Mayor Harry Barrett, chairman of the commission, said.

Day care centre needed in area

Cont'd. from Page 19 which permits the children to go on small trips to the library, parks and shopping, although more extensive excursions require special permission.

The region provides booklets for both parents and the women providing the day care, setting out exactly what is expected from both, in order to provide the most reliable day care possible.

The program also ensures insurance coverage for the women providing the day care. For a nominal fee, they are covered under the region's blanket liability insurance policy.

"To me, it would be very satisfying for a woman who wants to stay at home, because she can still earn some money, as well as doing something," Ms. Sheremeta said. "We have a waiting list in Georgetown both for the day care centre and for private home day care."
