Health officer to be hired soon

A new health officer for Halton region is expected to be hired by regional council August 6.

Regional personnel director Dennis Camm said last week that although no final decision has been made, "with the activity of the final week, the health and social services committee is narrowing in on an appointment."

Three candidates were considered last Tuesday in interviews held by the committee to fill the position vacated eight months ago by Dr. Joseph Chamberlain of Georgetown.

According to the provincial Public Health Act, the applicant must be a medical practitioner and would be responsible for seeing that the different aspects of the Act are carried out in Halton.

Four applicants were considered for the job earlier this year; however, they either turned down the appointment or were rejected by the health and social services committee.
