Seniors' crosswalk rejected by town

Town council has decided it would be safer for senior citizens at Georgetown's John T. Armstrong apartments to cross Guelph Street at the Maple Avenue traffic lights rather than at a proposed crosswalk outside the apartment building.

Council accepted advice last Tuesday night from its engineering department to reject the crosswalk opposite Howard Wrigglesworth School, voting instead to have residents continue using the Maple intersection some 500 feet to the east.

Councillors agreed that the illuminated crosswalk would rely too heavily upon drivers to be safety-conscious.

A study ordered by council last March noted that there are other safer places to cross Guelph Street nearer to the high school. Seniors wishing to cross Guelph at Maple have a 475-foot walk from the apartments to the Maple Avenue street corner.

However, the engineering department said it would paint a crosswalk across Guelph at Durham to provide an additional route for those not wishing to walk to the lights at Maple Avenue or Mill Street.

My wife has been trying to lose weight by a combination of horseback riding and push-ups. She does the horseback riding and the guy who puts her on the horse does the push-ups.
