

Crews clean Credit River

Two stolen wallets were among the booty uncovered by Experience '89 crews cleaning out tributaries of the Credit River in the Georgetown area this summer.

The crews, working under the direction of the Credit Valley Conservation Authority (CVCA), have cleaned Cooksville Creek, Loyallist Creek in Mississauga, Lorne Wood Creek in Lorne Park and tributaries of the Credit in Georgetown, Erin and Orangeville.

Most of the garbage collected during the clean-up consisted of beer bottles, rubber tires and shopping carts.

Experience '89 crews have also planted about 1,500 small trees in Metcalfe Ravine and along Fletcher's Creek in Brampton as part of an erosion control program. They have also made drainage swales next to Cooksville Creek so that rain run-off will flow into the creek rather than running into gardens and basements.

The three crews of five students each have also been helping out at Terra Cotta Conservation Area, splitting firewood and piling it in shelters. They also often spend part of Monday helping the four full-time staff members at Terra Cotta clean up after weekend vacationers.

The Experience program has been underway for ten years. The program, which is sponsored by the provincial government, is designed to help students who have difficulties finding summer jobs because they have no work experience to show an employer. In spite of a 25 per cent cutback in the program this year, the authority was able to hire 27 16 to 22-year-old students to work in the Credit River watershed on various projects.
