Wood as a Fuel

By: A. St. Germain

President

Canadian Wood Energy Institute

Many Canadians are switching to wood as a primary or supplemental source of home heating. This has two advantages. First of all you can save money compared to other heating methods and secondly wood is a renewable energy and reduces the requirements of other natural resources.

Heating with wood has many different aspects compared to other conventional methods. It must be available, seasoned, stored and hand fed into a fireplace, heater or furnace. Remember also that if you are away for any length of time other means are required to heat your home. Many improvements on wood heating appliances as well as new types have been introduced to the market.

Many people are not aware that wood heating appliances are thermostatically controlled and will allow heating periods of up to 12 hours with one fill of wood.

If one is to heat with wood naturally it is most important to assure yourself of a continuous supply of fuel and also make the cost comparison with other heating methods.

Wood is available from your own wood lot, government wood lots, farmers, local sawmills, regular wood suppliers, door-to-door salesmen, fuel yards, local newspaper ads and yellow pages.

Taste Better
When cooking kale, be sure to remove the woody midribs from the leaves; there is little loss of nutritive value and the kale will taste better.
