Centennial loses final

At Burlington last Friday, the girls volleyball team from Centennial made it - the final game of the Halton champions, but they were not able to defeat a strong team from John T. Tuck. The final score in the deciding game was 15-12.

No, these girls from Centennial are not loitering beside their lockers. It's just a part of their fitness training which can be optional for most of the girls, but if you want to try out for the basketball team, eight morning practices are mandatory.

Centennial has morning fitness

Some of the girls at Centennial's school start their morning out before nine o'clock with a burpee jump or a Japanese split. It's all part of an exercise program started by gym teacher Mrs. Ogden for the girls at the school who want to try out for the basketball team or just get fit. Ogden says that girls are often less active than boys in the winter because the boys have hockey, so she makes it mandatory for all girls who want to try out for the basketball team to attend at least eight of her fitness sessions. The girls also attain 5 points towards their school letter for participating.

Stewarttown awards

Stewarttown Senior Public School concluded its first annual Spirit Day last Friday with an awards presentation in the gym. Tabs were given out to all competitors in intramural and interscholastic sports. Finally, the male and female cross country individual awards were given out and the school "name the teams" contest winner was announced.

Tim Pollen was named the male cross country winner while Fiona Heaton won the girls' award. Finally, Donna Budweiser named the Stewarttown boy's team the Stallions and the girl's the Fillies.
