

Tactical squad may be part of '81 police budget

The Halton Regional Police Commission will be considering the cost of equipping a tactical and rescue unit for the police force as part of the 1981 budget.

At the commission meeting Thursday, members of the tactical and rescue units from the OPP, Peel Regional Police and Hamilton-Wentworth Regional Police appeared in full regalia to explain their equipment to the commissioners.

The tactical unit in Halton will be composed of 16 officers and deployed throughout the region. When the unit is made operational, these officers will carry their equipment with them at all times in preparation to answer a gun call or a special situation requiring extra precautions.

Chief James Harding said he hopes the unit will be operational by the fall of this year.

Among the items of equipment which could be purchased for such a squad are heavy vests, high-calibre rifles, gas launchers, gas grenades, sniper rifles with night-firing capability, shotguns and small-calibre weapons, the chief said. The squad already has a tactical van.

Harding to chair Police Act study

Halton's police chief has been selected by the Association of Chiefs of Police of Ontario to head their committee recommending changes in the Police Act.

Chief James Harding will chair the committee, which will review the Police Act of Ontario and suggest changes to bring it up to date.

"The province recognizes the Act is out of date, but they say changes are political suicide," Commission chairman Harry Barrett said. "You get a lot of sympathy but not much action."

"There's a lot of work to do on reviewing the Police Act," Chief Harding said. "The Ontario Police Act is not a good Act. It's an awful job to find something in there—there's no index or preamble. It's very frustrating for police bodies to deal with."
