'Farce' ends GLT season

 nerves. He's never completely happy unless he's busily crabbing about something or drawing attention to his predicament.
 Jan, meanwhile, is the typical straight, chin-up-in-the-midst-of-calamity spouse. It's not necessarily a strong character, but it has to be projected carefully, without over-acting the role. Ms. Jackson pulls it off crisply, too.
 Ernest is a delightful character, a genuine clod, somewhat baffled by the mayhem caused when Susannah appears seeking advice over the split between her and his son. Ron Hunt bubbles in the role, spitting away about the deteriorating condition of the house's ceilings or relishing the thought of sharing a can of pilchards (small fish) with Della, a reminder of a long-past romantic interlude. Ernest and Della are really the class clowns of bedroom political science.
 Della has some of the best lines in the play, and no one can carry them through to their belly-laughing conclusion like Mrs. Joyces. Della's rules for a successful marriage: "Feed him, make sure he has clean clothes in the morning and, for God's sake, don't tell him anything."
 Fine performances are also turned in by Ms. Slawson and Mr. Marchant as the play's young, innocent couple somehow caught up in the mish-mash simply by throwing a party in which the two adversaries meet. In fact, Ms. Slawson's portrayal of the moosey Kate in the busy first act was a major highlight of the evening's performance.
 Kate's and Malcolm's bedroom, while the scene of the initial marital eruption, in the end also offers the limited resolution to the hasty conflict between Trevor and Susannah.
 Ms. Bell's Susannah and Mr. Oxley's Trevor are aptly suited for each other, offering the most serious-minded component of the play. The two roles call for strong actors, actors, who in the midst of their characters' tight-lipped seriousness, can convey the comic inanity which the characters cause.
 As they seek consolation from different couples, they are immune to the trail of hilarious chaos they leave behind; as a couple they are entirely egocentric. Who'd want them at a party anyway?
 As usual, GLT technicians Mike Jackson, Bob Willis, Ron and Gord Hunt and Peter Welsh have come up with another great, but simple, set for the play. Ian Oldaker and assistantia Roger Heed and Peter Welsh had to be quick on the switching draw because, without curtains physical shift from bedroom to bedroom was all done with lighting.
 Final showings of the play Saturday and Sunday will begin at 8 p.m. Tickets will be available at the door or assure yourself a seat by getting yours early at Delrex Smoke-shop, John Boughton's Jewellers, Col-Craft, or call Greta Lee at the GLT box office, 877-5407.
