

Free concert launches Choral Society's new season

Already rehearsing at Knox church for another diverse musical year, Georgetown's premier choir shares its talents Oct. 24

Members of the Georgetown Choral Society are back together again for their eleventh season. New members are invited to join them Monday nights at 7:45 in Knox Presbyterian Church on Main Street. Tenors and basses are especially welcome.

Plant's sludge cleared by health officials

Herald Special
Halton regional health inspector Neil Pattullo says no salmonella bacteria were isolated in a sludge sample taken from the sludge digester at Maple Lodge Farms near Norval.

The sample was taken Sept. 7 by the ministry of environment after a neighbor questioned possible contamination in the sludge coming from the chicken processing plant which was being spread on neighboring property.

The sludge sample was taken from the plant because that sludge would be the same as what was going on the fields, Mr. Pattullo said.

The sludge in question had already been worked into the field, he said.

Men are always "hard to come by," according to the president of the Georgetown Choral Society which began its eleventh season recently.

"They should come out because there are lots of gorgeous women out here," laughed Tyrone Tutt, president of the Society.

"We can certainly use more basses, altos and tenors," agreed Dale Wood, director of the group since 1975.

Mr. Wood is still auditioning new members wanting to join the Society, although quite a few old hands, about 40 of them turned up for the first meeting of the season. Rehearsals are held Monday evenings from 7:30 to 9:45 p.m. The choir usually numbers between 50 and 60 people. Last year it had nine tenors, seven basses, 15 altos and 25 sopranos.

Because it's a volunteer group, there can be problems with getting the proper blend of voices. More tenors and basses are needed to balance the many sopranos.

The Choral Society is gearing up for its first concert Oct. 26. Mr. Wood said it will be a close version of last spring's "Broadway Tonight", which over 700 people attended. They plan to do a variety of music to appeal to the community at large, he said.

As he was speaking, a radio suddenly blared out heavy metal rock music. "Now that," said Mr. Wood, "is the only kind of music we don't do."

FREE CONCERT

The first concert will be at the new Library-Cultural Centre and will be a free concert to which they're inviting former members of the choir. If former members are interested in attending, they can get tickets by calling Kathy Jarvis at 877-3694 or 877-5206. After the concert, there'll be a reception, Mr. Tutt said.

They also plan to do four concerts at Christmas, with two performances of the "Messiah" and two of lighter Christmas music and carols. The Choral Society dates back to the 1930's. After being inactive for a number of years, it was revived in 1971 by Charlie Crimes and Ralph Ureel.

Mr. Wood teaches music for the University of Toronto's Royal Conservatory of Music and is the organist at St. John's United Church in Georgetown. Formerly assistant director and accompanist of the Centennial Choir in Etobicoke, he sang solo his first year with the Georgetown Choral Society before taking over as director the next year.

WILDLY WAVES
Mr. Wood is a man with a lot of energy when it comes to music. During practices held at Knox Presbyterian Church in Georgetown, he not only plays the piano standing up, but wildly waves his arms to direct four peeps of singers. His enthusiasm makes the choir great fun and inspires the group.

"I joined last year and thoroughly enjoyed it," said Mary Lamon of Speyside, back for another season. She'd never belonged to a choir before, but had always enjoyed singing.

Mrs. Lamon sings second soprano, "which is plenty high enough believe me," she says. "It's amazing the difference the choir has made in my singing. It's strengthened my voice and sharpened my ear," she said.

Mr. Tutt said the choir has improved over the years and that they are considering entering competitions, something they've never done before.

"It would be good for the choir. It would let us know how good we are. It's difficult to compare ourselves with other groups otherwise," he said. The emphasis is on singing, but the members also have a lot of fun at practices. Mr. Wood told of one prank last year when the choir all wore black eye-patches like Mr. Tutt's. Mr. Tutt was blinded in his left eye in an accident requiring him to wear the patch.
