

GRUESOME DISCOVERY

Brampton residents (left to right) Brian Bliss, Wayne Eithimiou and Dave McKinney came across this gruesome sight while driving along the Fifth Sideroad about 500 yards west of the Winston Churchill Boulevard intersection. The mounted sheep's head was part of a larger collection of five slaughtered sheep bagged and dumped in a ditch on the other side of the road. Halton regional police are at a loss to explain the strange occurrance discovered Monday around noon and say there are no reports about missing sheep from farmers in the area. The mess was cleaned up by the Halton Hills public works department.

Acton firefighters have taken interest in a proposal to move the Acton Hydro office to Georgetown. In a letter presented to council Monday night, the firefighters' association has suggested that if hydro moves out of its Alice Street headquarters, the fire department would move in. The Alice Street location would allow the department to conduct all operations out of one building. There is enough space there for the firehall meeting room and training

Make a one per cent pledge

By JOHN ROE

Herald Special The "One Per Cent Pledge" club gained another member this week. A second Georgetown bank - at this time wishing to remain anonymous - has agreed to donate $2,300 over the next two years towards the new Library and Cultural Centre.

The concept of the "One Per Cent Pledge" emerged when it was revealed that some financlal institutions used this as a standard guideline when considering making donations to worthy causes. The goal of the town's fund-raising drive is $230,000.

The fund-raising "action sub-committee" has been promoting the concept when meet-ing with potential corporate donors who have asked how much is expected of them. But until this week, only one bank was a member of this exclus-

Personal visits and follow-up letters are still continuing as the "action" team presses on with its last-minute appeal to the corporate and industrial sector to match funds already raised or pledged by individual citizens. This week the campaign thermometer was nudging $180,000 - with only a week and a half before the official opening of the centre Oct. 18.

But wherens major attention is being directed to the corporate and industrial sector, more individual donations are required to make good on pledges made on behalf of the arts community by Halton Hills Arts Council more than a the new theatre. In the next ten days, the Arts Council is expected to actively canvass its members who have not already contributed to consider purchasing a "place in perpetuity" in the cultural complex while the opportunity still exists. The idea of the name rughangings was the brainchild of Doreen Long, a long-time member of the Rug Hookers, lowing the huge success of Georgetown Little Theatre's similar seat-plaque scheme.

Mrs. Long said that while the Rug Hookers have drawn up tentative designs for the two rugs, work cannot begin on them until all the names have been received. The final draft will depend upon the different name lengths and how they're arranged.

As with the GLT scheme, donors may have their own names or those they wish to remember inscribed on the hangings. The maximum name-space available is 38 inches, allowing one inch per letter, a half inch between letters, and one inch between

The official opening is barely two weeks away and municipal officials are already clearing out the tricky technical details associated with the gala celebration in honor of the new library-cultural centre. Church Street in Georgetown between Market and Main Streets will be closed to traffic from 1 to 3 p.m. Oct. 18. The street closure enables the ribbon-cutting ceremony to proceed without being disturbed by traffic.

Fund-raising efforts for the library-cultural centre received a number of major boosts last week, including a $3,000 cheque presented by the Georgetown Chamber of Commerce at its luncheon Tuesday afternoon. Fittingly enough, the person responsible for receiving the Chamber's pledge was Brenda Sisnett, daughter of the late John Elliott, after whom the theatre portion of the new complex is named. The cheque was presented by Chamber secretary Walter Blehn (left) and president Doug
