

Premier praises OPP

By PETER HUGHES
Herald Special

Police forces are not above reproach, but Ontario is fortunate in its guardians of law and order.

Speaking at the opening of the Ontario Provincial police training centre in Brampton Thursday, Premier William Davis said police officers "do make mistakes because they're human."

"But, I say we in Ontario are fortunate indeed to have police of calibre, leadership and competency to maintain the civil society we expect."

The centre, located at Queen Street and McLaughlin Road, has been in operation since Sept. 8. It was formerly the Adult Training Centre - a minimum security detention facility for young male adults which was closed Aug. 31, 1979, by the ministry of correctional services.

Douglas Wiseman, minister of government services, said the new centre replaces training quarters previously located on Sherbourne Street, Toronto.

He said nine buildings on the site were renovated for OPP purposes starting in December of last year.

COST TOTAL

Facilities include a classroom and assessment centre, administration building, six residences, kitchen and dining hall. The total cost of the project was $800,000.

Also a part of a separate ministry of government services project, additional work has been completed at the heliport. The work included the construction of a heated concrete landing pad, and the provision for a new tower and garage facilities, site drainage and sodding.

In his speech, OPP commissioner Harold Graham said that during the past 50 years there has been a variety of training facilities.

He said it all started in an old building on Queen's Park Crescent, moved to a converted warehouse in Ajax and then to John Robinson's old school house on Sherbourne.

The one room school house on Sherbourne Street accommodated as many as fifty students who shared bedrooms, often with five students crammed together in one room.

"The move to this facility is the most significant move of all," said Mr. Graham. "From a one-room schoolhouse on Sherbourne Street, we now have many classrooms at our disposal and each student has his own private quarters and common recreation facilities in each residence."

He said the new facilities will develop and prepare both new and serving members of the OPP at a rate unequalled in their 72 year history.

NEW SYSTEM

One new system that will be started soon will be video taping training packages and distributing them to a large number of field units.

"By using the latest technology we'll be able to reach out to field members in the remote locations," said Mr. Graham. "And keep them in line with the latest procedures and newest legislation."

Premier Davis cut the ribbon to open the new facility and was honored with a street sign to be named Davis Drive. The name will be given to the main road going into the complex.

Mr. Davis told those present he was pleased to see the facility located in his riding and jokingly quipped when other municipalities saw the competition they weren't surprised to see where the facility finally ended up.
