ENERGY

SCOPE

Ride sharing makes sense,

saves

Wouldn't it be great to be driven to work instead of driving?

Well, if you hire a limousine it'll probably cost you a lot of money. But if you find a carpool partner, you'll probably save a lot of money. As well as saving on gasoline and maintenance, sharing a ride reduces your driving strain. And if you've ever been stuck for a ride when your car is being serviced, you'll appreciate the convenience of a carpool. Not convinced yet? Well, consider the wider implications, then. In today's uncertain energy climate, anything you can do to reduce your gasoline consumption is welcome. This is especially true in Ontario, a province with little crude oil of its own. Half the oil consumed in Ontario now is used in transportation. Thirty per cent of this is used by commuters, the vest majority of them driving alone. You don't have to be on your way to work to benefit from ridesharing. If you have extra space, why not share your vehicle with neighbors or friends the next time you head for the cottage, the ski trails, the festival in Stratford or Niagara-on-the-Lake? To promote carpools, the Ontario government has launched a ridesharing program with carpool and vanpool demonstrations across the province. These are proving that sharing a ride offers a commuter a less stressful, door-to-door service with significant financial savings. How do you find carpool

A few employers help their employees set up carpool programs. If your company doesn't offer this assistance, do it Put a notice on a company or community bulletin board, in a company or community newsletter. List your name, telephone number, the area where you are commuting from and to and your hours of work. You should also state whether you prefer to drive or ride and whether you smoke.

Once the carpool is set up, establish simple rules: • determine who is to drive and when:

be punctual; decide whom to call if arrangements have to be changed and designate a reserve driver

• set a regular timetable and

• decide on cost-sharing arrangements. Now, how do you determine cost? Well, some carpools base payment on the distance travelled, others relate it to public transit fares.

If you drive in a carpool, it may be wise to increase your liability insurance. It only costs a few dollars extra. But also remember to tell your insurance company if you join a campool as a passenger.

Since you don't need your car to commute, your insurance rates might drop. If you take turns using yourcar, you'll still reduce mileage and probably lower your insurance rate. For more information, write Energyscope, care of the Ministry of Energy, G.M.S.
