

Bad news for outdoorsmen can be averted - Red Cross

An unexpected spill into the water can spell bad news on any day spent in the outdoors. But in the fall, when the water and air are colder, falling in is more than an inconvenience; it can easily lead to death by drowning or hypothermia, the rapid cooling of the inner body.

The Canadian Red Cross Society urges fishermen, hunters and boaters to wear Department of Transport approved Life-Jackets or personal Flotation Devices (PFDs), whenever they are in a boat, or wading in water along the shore. "Heavy clothing, boots and gear, when wet, make it difficult to swim. Cold water can quickly draw heat from the body," says Carol Robson, Small Craft Safety Chairman, Ontario Division. "That's why we recommend in, or on the water, the wearing of a government approved PFD or Life-Jacket".

Life Jackets can be bulky, but recently-introduced PFDs are lightweight and comfortable, and can be worn for warmth like an extra sports vest or sweater. Some even come in the form of jackets with pockets, loops and hooks to hold tackle or gear.

If you do fall in, once you're out of the water it's essential that you get to a warm sheltered area, remove your wet clothing and put on something dry and warm as quickly as possible.

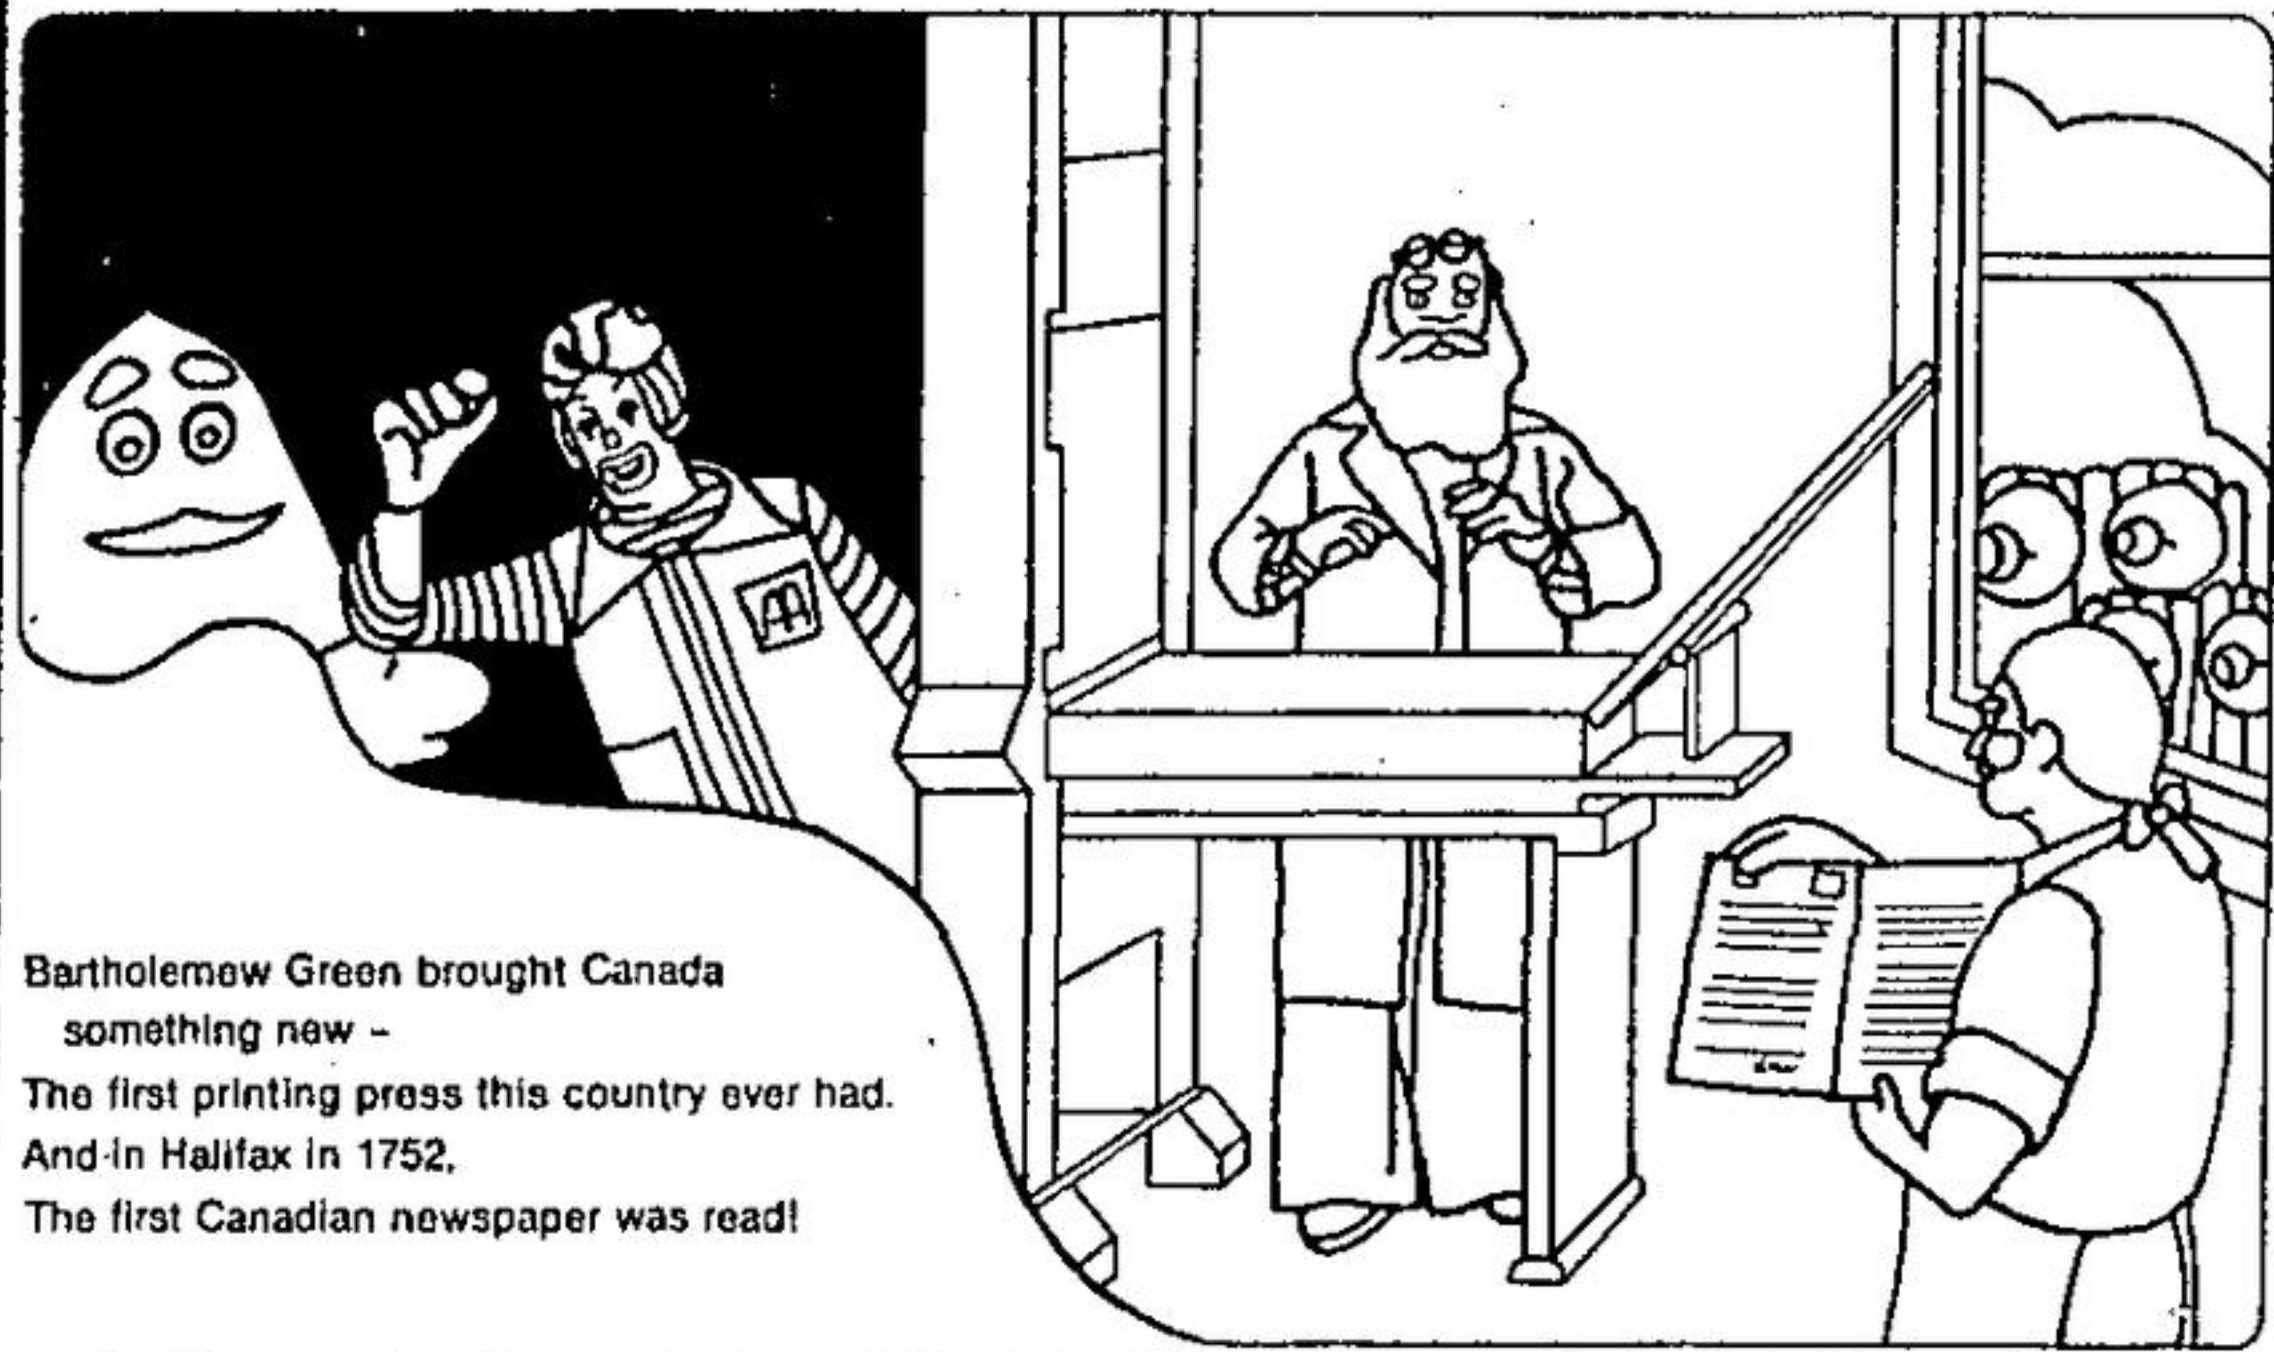

The symptoms of hypothermia are shivering, mind confusion and numbness in the hands and feet followed by unconsciousness and death. Hypothermia can occur not only as a result of immersion in water but by exposure to extremely cold air.

For safety, Miss Robson urges fishermen, boaters and other sportsmen or women to follow these procedures:

- Wear a government-approved Life Jacket or PFD.
- Don't overload your boat.
- Always sit to shoot, cast, start the motor, or urinate. (Anchor from the bow - front - of the boat).
- Carry a change of clothing in a waterproof bag.

For more information on safe boating practices, call your Red Cross - 877-5233, or sign up for a Red Cross Small Craft Safety Survival Course.
