

Brian supplies consistency to Cornell

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following is a story submitted through the Cornell University Athletic Department's public affairs branch, which appeared recently in their hockey game program.

The article is about Georgetown native Brian Hayward, who plays goal for the team and is one of the captains.

The last few seasons have been quite a roller-coaster ride for followers of Cornell hockey.

One member of the Big Red team who can be counted on to supply a consistent performance every time out is senior goaltender Brian Hayward.

For Hayward, consistency in the net is nothing new. The Georgetown, Ont. native has compiled an impressive record in the three years he has spent defending the Cornell goal.

Last season, he notched a 3.54 goals against average in 19 games. Hayward made 525 saves while winning 11 games against four losses and a tie. In his career, Hayward is 31-17-1.

In the 1981-82 season, Hayward will try to help steer the Big Red on a consistent course in his role as tri-captain.

"We have a large number of freshmen on the team, and the captains have taken the responsibility of helping them to adapt to Cornell both on and off the ice," Hayward said.

GOOD TALENT

"I think the fans can expect to see some excellent play from these freshmen," Hayward commented.

"It is hard to point out any particular players because they all have a good attitude and good talent."

"None of us who were on the team these past two years can forget what a great experience it was to get to the nationals, and we think if we work hard, we can do it again," said Hayward, who was to goal when Cornell beat Northern Michigan in the second game of their two-game NCAA series last March.

The experience he has garnered taught Hayward a lesson he hopes his teammates will heed this winter. "Nothing we get will be easy," he noted, "and our degree of success really depends on how hard we work for it."

For Hayward, the hard work that culminates in his stints in the net began last summer. "I had the chance to play a lot of hockey over the summer at home," he commented.

"It helps to keep your mind in the game, and it keeps you in shape."

For a goaltender, keeping his mind in the game is often the key to a consistently good effort. Hayward's mental preparation begins long before he skates over to the crease.

"A few days before the game, I try to meet with the coaches to go over the tendencies of the other team's shooters, and their power play system," Hayward said.

"Then, on game day, I spend some time at home, being quiet if I can, so I can go over all the possible situations I might have to face in the game," he said.

Despite his intense concentration on the game, Hayward says that the crowd does make a difference to him. "Here at home, the crowd is so supportive that you sort of get comfortable with it the minute you step out onto the ice," he said.

"On the road, when we face a hostile crowd, it just gives me more incentive. I figure that if the crowd pays that much attention to me, it's a compliment."

DIFFICULT JOB

Once he gets to the rink, Brian Hayward may have the most difficult job of anyone on the Cornell roster but he handles the pressure well. "I suppose that I am a very fundamental-style goaltender," he stated.

"I don't particularly have a style or any flamboyant habits on the ice, but I try to stick to the basics, and concentrate," Hayward said.

One insight into Brian Hayward's view of hockey epitomizes his style as a fundamental, team player. "When I think about the games I have played in here, I really do not remember them on a save-by-save basis, or anything like that," Hayward said. "Instead, I remember particular games as a whole, and the way the team came on."

Hayward's most memorable game would probably rank up there on the list of many Lynah Rink fans as well: the 1979 victory over Boston University here.

"They came in for that game with a very high rating, but we really put it together, and I remember it as probably the most solid 60 minutes of hockey I have played here," said Hayward.

To give the 1982 team solid defensive performances, Hayward will be working with several new defensemen.

Jills tryouts

The Halton Hills Jills gymnastics club is holding TRYOUTS for pre-competitive Jills and Jillians. The tryouts will take place Sunday Jan. 24 at 2 p.m. in the Rose Room above Memorial Arena located on Mill Street. These tryouts are for girls interested in training with the Jills from January to June 1982.

Local gymnast Gail Eastwood, 12, placed second allround in Central Ontario, when she competed in her first year Tyro B (14 and under) division Saturday in Orangeville. Placing first on uneven parallel bars, sixth on beam, sixth on vault, her combined score of 32-34 gave her the silver medal. Gymnasts from 15 clubs that range from Owen Sound to Welland competed in the first Central Ontario qualifying meet, for a place on the team that will represent the region in the Provincial championships in Thunder Bay in May.

McDuffe signs

Confirmation of former Georgetown Raider goaltender Peter McDuffe's signing with the Milton Intermediate B Aeros, a Raider affiliate team, was given to the Milton press by the Aeros' president Gary Thomas last week. A Milton native, McDuffe won the league's goaltending title last year as a Raider, but injuries during the playoffs hindered his performance. This season McDuffe declined an offer by the Raiders to return, citing a number of reasons.
