Nineteen-year-old Bally Baines will twist the night away to shape up for summer. Bally is one of 18 women who were probably thinking about bathing suits and halter tops when they joined Jill Clifford's new dancercise class at the Esqueusing Community Hall. The girls are using aerobics and callisthenics, and some dance techniques, to shed unwanted pounds.

She isn't Barbie Allen, but the ladies on her street figured she'd do just fine.

So when some of the gals that live on Harold Street decided to ask physical fitness expert Jill Clifford to set up a dancercise fitness class, the 24-year-old grade school teacher went ahead and took up the challenge.

Tuesday night at the Esqueusing Community Hall in Stewarttown, Clifford's new class met for the first time for a sweaty hour of aerobics, callisthenics and jazz routines.

Although the course costs $45 for 18 hours of exercise, Clifford maintains she won't get rich running the classes. There are only 10 people signed up at this point, but the Western University phys ed grad says she started the course because she wanted to.

"I love doing it," said the Grade 5 teacher. "The people here seem interested in improving their fitness level, and this course is definitely going to get tougher as it goes along."

Clifford is big on the body-toning callisthenics, and sets aside just a small portion of the hour-long class for jazz. She hopes the format will appeal to the men out there who might be interested in slimming and trimming.

The class meets Tuesdays in Stewarttown, and Thursday nights in Glen Williams, between the hours of 8:30-9:30 p.m.
