Farming the Forests

FOREST RENEWAL EXPENDITURES CANADA ($ MILLIONS) (Source: CPPA)

Canada's bountiful forest lands provide the base for the country's largest manufacturing industry: pulp and paper. In recent years, attention has turned to the question of how Canada can produce an adequate supply of wood fibre so that it can maintain its present share and participate in the growing world demand for forest products. Spending on forestry by governments and industry has risen sharply in recent years and much more is required. Money is invested in protecting existing forests from the ravages of fire, insects and disease. It is invested in seedlings, and in thinning and fertilizing stands of timber. The investment pays off in more fibre per hectare. To meet the growing competition in world pulp and paper markets, Canada needs more than modern, efficient mills. It also needs, and is developing bigger and better forests.
