

Video tape trial continues

Ten allegedly obscene video tapes seized from Georgetown's H and H Video passed from the hands of crown attorney Anthony Vale and defence lawyer Bill Mackie to Milton provincial court Judge John Robinson Wednesday.

Judge Robinson was also handed a movie breakdown by Mr. Vale, in which the crown attorney had identified scenes he considered obscene under the Criminal Code.

Judge Robinson will be viewing the tapes seized by Halton regional police back in May. The trial, which is the first in which obscenity charges have been laid against a Halton video shop, will continue in January.

Police laid charges of possession of obscene material for circulation, and circulation of obscene material against H and H Video owners Mille Adams, 48, and Randy Humeniski, 37. Clerk Beverly Ann Boulton, 31, was charged with circulating obscene material.

"Tara", "Up", "Maraschino Cherry", "Naughty Victorians", "Female Chauvinist", "Touch Me In The Morning", "Office house Blues", "Talk to 2" were the ten films for which charges were laid under section 159 (1) (a) of the Criminal Code.

FABULOUS ALADDIN

The play Aladdin kept the audience guessing last Friday night at the John Elliott Theatre. The visiting Peel Players performed and dazzled with their array of seventy fabulous costumes. The Georgetown Little Theatre encouraged and promoted the play. (Herald photo by Brenda Turcott)

Rex Ryan Heslop, 6, and sister Jodie Anne, 8, spent their Saturday morning at the library building ginger bread sleighs. Though it was tempting to eat the delicious-looking sleighs, both said they would wait to show their parents before devouring their creations.
