Time to quit?

Health and Welfare Canada, in co-operation with the Canadian Cancer Society, has developed a smoking cessation program called "Time To Quit". The program will assist those who want to "break the habit" and consists of three half-hour television shows, hosted by William Shatner, free self-help guides as well as information on follow-up and maintenance programs. For further information, contact your local Unit of the Canadian Cancer Society.

Decline

The largest decline in smoking prevalence between 1977-1981 among females in the labour force occurred in the managerial, professional and clerical occupations. Women employed in the service, occupations product fabricating and transport occupations were least likely to reduce smoking prevalence.
