Last week I gave you a run down of the theatrical and musical treats in store for the month of April.

Well April has other delights to offer. First and foremost for any book lover is the "Annual Book Sale" sponsored by the University Women's Club of Georgetown.

This eagerly awaited event takes place Saturday, April 14 at Knox Church Hall. It's a great opportunity to stock up on books of every kind at rock bottom prices and you can even feel noble while getting a great bargain, because all the proceeds go for scholarships and community projects.

April 12 is a date to keep in mind. The Town of Halton Hills will be holding "Recognition and Honors Award Evening" at the John Elliott Theatre. For information about this community event call 877-5185 ext. 262 or 260.

If you are film buff who loves old movies, but hates to watch them on T.V. often butchered by poor editing to make them fit into a time slot, take heart. The Halton Hills Recreation Department is sponsoring a "Golden Oldies Film Festival". To find out more call 877-5185 ext. 267.

As usual the two public libraries in Halton Hills have much to interest us. As part of our Bicentennial celebrations at the Georgetown Library there will be a free lecture by Christopher Moore, author of "Louisburg Portraits" and "The Loyalists" Wednesday, April 11 at 7:30 p.m.

The Acton Library is presenting "Quiltfest" a two part series on the history and the "how to" of quilts. Wednesday, April 18 will feature a film program on quilts, "Threading Through Time" and "Patterns of Love".

The following Wednesday, April 25 will consist of a lecture illustrated with slides by the artist John Willard. The fee for the series is $2. The time both nights is 7:30 p.m.

The final lecture in the "Survival Series" at the Georgetown Library will take place on Tuesday, April 24 at 7:30 p.m. The subject will be "Creative Visualization: Getting the minds eye to work for you".

Julian Peters and Blake Heathcote explain the fundamentals of community theatre to about 17 aspiring actors and actresses at a work shop put on by the Georgetown Little Theatre at John Elliott Theatre on the weekend. Heathcote is directing "On Golden Pond" a GLT production that opens this weekend for a two-week run.

Theatre workshop teaches how to 'think on stage'

Seventeen Georgetown residents received a crash course in show business at a two-day theatre workshop, held over the weekend at the John Elliott Theatre.

The clinic was sponsored by the Georgetown Little Theatre and conducted by Blake Heathcote, currently directing the local group's production of "On Golden Pond", which will open April 7 for a two-week run.

Heathcote and actor-writer Julian Peters used a series of vocal exercises and improvisational acting sessions to impart the fundamentals of good theatre to the workshop participants.

"Basically, we hope to give them an understanding of theatre fundamentals," Peters said. "We try to teach them how to listen and how to think on stage."

Peters, 29, often writes with Heathcote, who has directed some 50 shows, including three Broadway productions. The two men work together to do about five similar workshops over the course of a year.

"Blake and I don't believe in acting courses, that teach you how to act," Peters said. "Theatre is a craft you learn over a long period of time."

The workshop was financed by a percentage of a government grant the GLT received to do "On Golden Pond". GLT members paid $5 to attend, while non-members paid $10.

"It was very worthwhile," GLT vice-president David Clifton told The Herald. "Most of us haven't done this type of thing before, so it's all very new. We have certainly enjoyed it."

Business response poor

Dismayed at the response to a proposed tourism study, Burlington Coun. Jim Grieve delivered an icy blast to Halton's business community last Wednesday.

He was angered that businesses would support the idea of identifying Halton's potential as a tourism market, but not want to financially contribute to the region's share of the study.

"I'm disgusted with the pittance the business community has come up with," Coun. Grieve told Halton's administration and finance committee.

Patricia Krueger soloist

Society presents Three masterpieces

Herald Special
The Georgetown Choral Society is delighted to present Patricia Krueger, of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra, as solo pianist in the Spring Concert, April 13 and April 15.

Patricia was trained at the Royal Conservatory of Music, University of Toronto, and has studied under a number of prominent musicians, Hayunga Carmen, Alberto Guerrero and Pierre Souvainran. She is an accomplished keyboard performer specializing in piano, organ, celest and harpsichord. She is also a fully qualified percussionist and serves the TSO in this role as well.

Patricia will be joined by a group of young musicians who were last in town in 1982. They were brought together by native son David Harding, originally. Since David is in New York, the group is organized for this occasion by Paul Widner, a cellist.

The group consists of a number of young musicians who came together in various youth orchestras and ensembles. They are all highly accomplished performers and spend one rehearsal before going on stage in a performance.

Please come out and support these performers in our Three Choral Masterpieces concert.

Tickets are available from choir members or by calling 877-6839, 877-8861 or 853-0211.
