

CLERGY COMMENT

By DR. JOHN M. DRICKAMER
Immanuel Lutheran Church
Everybody is equal. Nobody is equal. Which statement is true? Actually, if we think about it, both statements are true. They are true in different senses.

The idea that everyone is - or certainly should be - equal before the law is very laudable. "Equal justice for all" is a great legal ideal and should be vigorously pursued.
But to speak about equality in any other sense does not make much sense. Each of us is unique. Each of us is different. No one is the same as anyone else.
We are different in appearance. Even people with similar height and weight are built differently. Even identical twins, with the same genetic make-up, look different to their parents.

The same is true of ability. No matter who you are, there is no one who has exactly your set of abilities - or exactly your set of limitations. No one can do everything well (except Jesus, Mark 7:37).
You may not be able to sing as well as Anne Murray. But there are some things you can do better than she can.

You may not be able to play hockey as well as Wayne Gretzky, but there are some things you can do better than he can.
Even the so-called "handicapped" have their uniqueness, their ability, and their contribution to make, if nothing other than the capacity to love and be loved.
God planned for every individual to be unique. His intention in creating the human race was not to make a large number of interchangeable copies. The way in which He designed us to procreate (not to reproduce) is intensely personal and leads to individuals.

We can see the same point in all creation. People make buildings, which are nice and symmetrical and "copyable". But God makes trees and mountains which are different, unique, and inimitable.
People build automobiles and other assembly line products which are interchangeable and have interchangeable parts. That is good in its way and makes sense economically.

But God makes us each different, unique, individual. People are not interchangeable. We may threaten one another - hopefully just trying to be cute - by saying, "You can be replaced". But the fact is that none of us can be replaced. We are as unique as snowflakes or rocks or trees.
But even in heaven those who are saved will still be individuals.
