Spot on Seven

Popular kitchen has now closed

By FIONA A. SMITH
Herald Special
Miss Smith is a Georgetown woman who worked the last three summers preparing and serving food in the internationally renowned Spot on Seven on Guelph street.

Over a quarter century of food service has come to an end as the widely acclaimed Spot on Seven restaurant closed its doors. Miss Gladys Fraser, owner and manager, decided not to re-open this spring and is taking a well deserved and active retirement.

In June of 1956 a reporter from the Georgetown Herald first wrote about the "unusual structure" that had sprouted along Highway Seven on the outskirts of town. The idea of "The Spot" had begun long before in the dreams of its owner.

Miss Fraser, an art teacher at the Montreal High School for Girls, conceived of a restaurant to "serve only the best to only a few". Everything at "The Spot" was to be fresh, vegetables grown locally, homemade soups, juices and desserts, and breads ovenworn. Spot on Seven's reputation was earned by a concern for details.

Miss Fraser commissioned an original design from architect E.C.S. Cox. With its butterfly-shaped roof and plentiful windows that opened on to the Credit River Valley, the restaurant offered diners a quiet evening in a charming country setting.

The interior of Spot on Seven, decorated in rich, rustic tones, was filled with articles collected over the years and if you were lucky Miss Fraser would explain their significance. For example, the copper clock had the twelve letters of Miss Fraser's name in the place of the numerals; the hearth tiles were made with foundation clay taken during excavation. Many of the paintings on the walls were done by her former students; photographs highlighted her family history, staff and friends. Even the small soup bowls were hand made by Miss Fraser.

In some ways "The Spot" is hardly recognizable from photographs taken in the late 1950's when cows roamed nearby fields. A tiny willow tree planted by Miss Fraser's brother now towers over the restaurant assuring dining intimacy despite the commercial development over the years. But what never changed was Miss Fraser's commitment to good food, careful preparation and attentive service. This dedication brought diners from every corner of the country and guaranteed their return time and time over.

Keeping the tables laden over the years at Spot on Seven were (standing, left to right) Sue Alexander, Marg Reynolds, Kathy Gastle, Sue Brown, owner Gladys Fraser, Lore Penkenin, (seated), Julie Phillips, Lynda Chadwick and Fiona Smith.
