Georgetown Parade

Santa smiles as Halton downpour drenches

Not only did parade participants have to endure the wet weather, but Mother Nature also provided a chilling wind. Here members of the St. John's Drum and Bugle Corps from Brantford have a difficult time straightening out their banner for the wind. (Herald photo)

The highlight of the Santa Claus parade was the man they named the parade after. Jolly old St. Nick didn't seem to be any less jolly, even if the weather Saturday was rather damp and wet. There was still a good turnout of children and families who enjoyed the variety of floats.

This musician might appear at first to be just clowning around, but indeed, he is a real musician. The Brampton Clown Band delighted fans with music from their float. (Herald photo)

Pulled along with the help of a tractor, this float sends out the customary greeting for the Christmas season. (Herald photo)

The slogan on the truck advertises the benefits of being a Big Brother, but if this driver was any bigger, she would have an extremely difficult time trying to drive this little van. (Herald photo)

The wet weather made it difficult for marching bands and practising became almost impossible. Here members of the St. John's Drum and Bugle Corps from Brantford had the right idea as Thomas Collard (left) and Terri Bartosik (right) provide dry shelter for drummer Paige Morden.

With rain interrupting the parade now and then, the wet weather made footing a potential problem. However, this young acrobat doesn't seem to have any difficulty in her attempt to do a cartwheel. Youngsters cartwheeled their way along the entire parade route. (Herald photo)
