Regional councillors will receive their 1986 grant book at the end of this month, and the Health and Social Services Committee will review the grant requests Feb. 10.

March of Dimes work for the disabled

This month begins the annual Ontario March of Dimes Ability Fund Campaign held from Jan. 1 to Feb. 15. Communities large and small across the province are mounting door-to-door or mail campaigns to raise funds for the many services the March of Dimes provides to physically disabled adults.

When the Salk vaccine was discovered in 1955 polio was thought to be no longer an issue in this country. However, many adults who had polio as children are now encountering either new or recurring symptoms. These include muscle weakness, fatigue, pain and difficulty breathing.

Many who fought so hard decades ago to recover from polio and abandon aids such as crutches and respirators are finding that they must rely on them once again to maintain their independence and mobility.

The Ontario March of Dimes, established 35 years ago to raise funds to find a polio cure, have focussed new energy to serving those polio survivors who have this post-polio syndrome. Of the approximately 5,500 polio survivors now living in Ontario, 25 per cent or more may have post-polio syndrome.

The Post-Polio Program of the Ontario March of Dimes includes a registry of Ontario residents who had polio. The registry was established to document concerns for the education of medical personnel and to provide a support network for people who are concerned with the effects of the disease. There are presently over 1,500 registrants.

The Ontario March of Dimes has also initiated many support groups across the province to help deal not only with the physical symptoms but also with the emotional trauma caused by post-polio syndrome. People feel frustrated and frightened at the prospect of becoming dependent on mobility aids once again.

One of the goals of the Post-Polio Program is to see the establishment of a treatment centre which provides all assessment and rehabilitation services under one roof.

The Ontario March of Dimes offers many services to the more than three-quarters of a million people in Ontario with some form of physical disability. Direct services include providing assistive devices such as wheelchairs and artificial limbs, vocational rehabilitation, a micro-computer training program, summer residential camps, travelling medical clinics and the post-polio registry.

The Ontario March of Dimes is also active in research into the effects of microcomputers on the lives of physically disabled adults; assists local groups with issues such as transportation, housing, human rights and accessibility; and have a government relations and public awareness education program.

These services and more are made possible in part through the generosity of public donations to the Ability Fund Campaign. Donations to help reach the goal of $1.6 million can be sent to the Ontario March of Dimes, 60 Overlea Boulevard, Toronto, M4H 1B6.

New industry might not receive tax break

New industrial and commercial developments in Halton Hills may no longer be exempt from regional lot levies.

There are no regional levies charged now to these developers, but the impact of imposing a regional tax is being looked at in a capital contributions study now underway by Halton staff.

Regional Planning Director Rash Mohammed told The Herald terms of reference have been approved for the in-house study already and now the meat of the matter is under consideration, to see what industry will bear.

"If industry doesn't pay for it, it is coming out of taxpayers' pockets," Mr. Mohammed said of regional capital works.

He said the last council's policy opposed charging regional lot levies to industrial and commercial developments in Halton region.

"It doesn't mean to say the new council won't impose them," Mr. Mohammed said. "We have to raise that issue with the new council and they'll have to say how much they value new growth in terms of the mill rate."

Right now, only the town council's charge lot levies to new developments. The regional planner said previous regional councils have said they were willing for taxpayers to pay the cost of capital spending for regional services like sewer and water works and not charge the new industries for it.

Mr. Mohammed said new industries bring additional traffic to a road and increase road maintenance and upgrading costs for the region. These are capital costs that Halton taxpayers are absorbing in their regional tax bills.

"If the trucks weren't using the road, you wouldn't have to spend the money to repair it," Mr. Mohammed said.

The Georgetown Chamber of Commerce is considering sending a letter to Halton region asking that Halton Hills not be included in any regional plan to charge additional lot levies on new industry coming into town.
