Highland pipers salute wedding bliss

For the first time in Georgetown Highland Games history a wedding was part of the day's events. More than a thousand onlookers stopped to watch the ceremony between Tony Held of Gower Court and Christine

Hamilton of Dayfoot Drive, both of Georgetown. They are seen here exchanging rings as best man Bob Held watches. (Herald photo by Sandy Campbell)

The only one playing the Scottish harp (the clarsach) at the Games was Becky Biro of Ottawa. There are not many clarsach players in Canada, but there are a few competitions in the United States, she said. (Herald photo)

The pipers were plentiful at the Highland Games. They could be heard far from the Fairgrounds and

Small ballerinas showed the desire to aspire and fill the dance slippers of older dancers from the Halton Hills School of Dancing. The school put on a show at the John Elliott Theatre June 13.

One of the highlights of the day were the massed bands concerts.

There were two. Twenty-eight bands played and marched together. They displayed an amazing sense of harmony in sound and step. (Herald

Scottish pride was everywhere. It was seen by the tartans made into traditional garments and in less traditional garments like this 20th century sun hat. (Herald photo)

This couple came all the way from St. Paul Minnesota to be part of the day and visit Toronto. R. Miles and

Laurie Sterba said their ancient garb was quite cool on the hot day. (Herald photo)

Pick a tartan, any tartan. Every Scottish family plaid appeared to be for sale in some form at the Scottish, specialty shops. Ross Dunn was one of many vendors selling Scottish garments and novelties.
