Four boys battle TV networks for fun, profit

By SANDY CAMPBELL.

Herald Staff Four Georgetown boys kept a 1986 New Year's resolution but were anxious to break it in 1987. Each boy was $200 richer because of a bet with their parents.

Mark and David Boere, and Matthew and Zack Parent survived a year without television. On Jan. 1, 1987 each was entitled to their $200.

With "so many good shows on", the bet ended just in time, said David. David is two years younger than his brother Mark, who is 11 years old. "We're going to have to catch up to everyone else," said Mark, about returning to television. Although confident they could complete the resolution, the boys did not do it with ease. Six months into become a profitable one for David and Mark. With their $200, each boy plans to buy a mountain bike. The bet is over for the boys. There are no plans to repeat it in 1987. However, the following year is a possibility, David said. Truthfully, the boys were not without the use of the family's two televisions for the entire year. They were allowed to watch movies on their VCR and programs of value which were taped, Mr. Boere said. Because Dad is a James Bond fan too, the boys saw their share of 007. Taped educational shows like The Nature of Things were also considered within limits. The boys did not have these treats very often. Mr.

Boere said.

without watching television the Parent and Boere boys received $200 the endurance test David considered cancelling the bet and taking half the $200.

Dad didn't make the task the easiest at times. "He would say, 'You can watch. You will save us a lot of money if you do'," Mark said.

The tempting was in fun. Actually, Mr. Boere was happy to see his boys succeed and proud of that accomplishment. "Hopefully they learned something about power," said Nick Boere.

The boys certainly learned more in school. Their marks improved, Mr. Boere said. David and Mark attend the French immersion school Ecole Sacre-Coeur. Their reading, writing and French comprehension improved.

The boys were not the only ones to benefit from a turned off TV The family was brought closer together. Instead of watching TV, especially on Saturday morning, the family did more things together.

Now the year-long fast is over, Mark and David are eager to see the latest that's on TV. The Ghost Buster cartoon, comedies and sports are some of the shows they will be tuning in regularly. Dad may be intervening and regulating the boys' watching, he said. If the old habits of watching too much TV returns, Mr. Boere will be stepping in. "I would like to see the TV used as a medium of learning," he said

The idea to abstain from TV for an entire year was the Parents', Matthew and Zack, who are the same ages as the Boere boys and attend the same school. The boys and their parents are good friends.

For now, Mark and David Boere are not interested in overindulging in TV. Too much TV gies David headaches and Mark is planning to limit himself to three or four shows a day. "We had a good time doing it," David said of living without TV "You can do a lot of things without perience for the family has also TV," Mark said.

Basement in flames

A fire which began in the basement of a Georgetown home New Year's Day would have been much worse had someone not been home, said Fire Prevention Officer Bob Meads.

The fire began in the basement of 38 Edith St. at 5:15 p.m. Embers from the chimney clean out fell onto the couch. The fire spread from the couch to a chair, rug and ceiling. Damage was estimated at $3,000. "It might have been worse. They got off easy," Mr. Meads said. Damage would have been tess, if a smoke detector was in the base-ment, Mr. Meads said.

in more ways than one, all was not quiet on New Year's Eve. Around Halton Hills there were several incidents which kept Halton Regional Police officers

A 46-year-old Georgetown woman was charged with aggravated assault and using a weapon dangerous to public peace for cutting her husband with a knife, police said. Police were called to the King Street home in Georgetown at 11:51 p.m. New Year's Eve. Her husband received three stitches to his left shoulder and was released from Georgetown and District Memorial Hospital.

Four people were charged by police at a New Year's party where parents were away. Police arrived at a Queen Street home in Acton at 12:30 a.m. after fights broke out and doors and windows were damaged. The parents of the host were away, police said

A 23-year-old was charged with breach of probation. Three others will face fines for being intoxicated and trespassing.

A 16-year-old, who was found passed out in a snow bank on Pennington Crescent, was charged with underage drinking. He was found at 2 a.m. Jan. 1.

Nine washing machines at Barrager's Cleaners had their fronts kicked and dented between 6 and 11 p.m. Dec. 31. Damage to the 166 Guelph Street business totalled

A large block of ice was thrown through a picture window of the Liquor Control Board of Ontario in Acton New Year's Eve. Damage to. the 256 Queen St. business was: $750, police said.

A garbage can was thrown through the window of the door at Acton's YMCA at 3:15 a.m. Jan. 1. Damage to the door at 40 Mill Street East was $50.

Settling Halton's landfill question and getting involved in energy from waste (EFW) so that project too comes one step closer are top priorities for Halton Regional chairman Peter Pomeroy in 1987.

Looking back over 1986, Mr. Pomeroy recently congratulated his councillors on maturing over the past year so that they worked as a municipality instead of four entities.

The estimates on the timing for an environmental assessment hearing were "out by about six months", he sald. It is now expected the hearings will be held in the spring. Although the solid waste issue still divides councillors, having just about achieved that hearing, he urged councillors now to spend their energies on EFW.

The long-awaited Enterac development south of Georgetown was his second personal priority in 1986, Mr. Pomeroy said, and agreements for that were completed last week.

"Our department heads were almost certain at the beginning of last year that it could not be done in one year," he said. "It's indicative of the effort expended that it was done even though we were without a chief administrative officer for six months of that time.

"I give them all the credit. It was an agreement that took thousands of hours to put together to protect both the town and the region's interests."

The development is the first major growth in Georgetown in more than
