

Outlook on Halton Hills

Vehicles of all sorts wheeled successfully along the parade route Monday. The drivers were on their way to a puppet show at the Norval Community Centre. (Herald photo)

Looking dashing in a three-piece suit and carrying a black brooch through Norval Monday afternoon was official parade marshal Julian Reed. Leading the annual parade with the former MPP was mayor for the day Joan Carter. Mrs. Carter is the Norval postmistress. (Herald photo)

Slowly but surely, Sam Meredith worked his way through a hot dog. The one and a half year old has a mouthful of teeth and loves hot dogs, his mom said. Sister Melanie, 5, enjoyed a hot dog as well. (Herald photo)

Norval celebrates Victoria Day

Vintage cars were seen on Norval's main street.

Everybody loves a parade, especially kids. The youngsters dressed up in their scouting uniforms or in funny costumes to take part in the procession. The Vic-

Do you recognize this face? If you don't, it's forgivable. Those glasses are a good coverup, especially when you're clowning around, as was this participant in the Norval parade. (Herald photo)

They were chefs of the barbecue, feeding the hungry who turned out after the annual Victoria Day parade through Norval. Susan Glassford (left) and Jane Cookson had 145 hamburgers and 20 dozen hot dogs to cook up Monday afternoon. The two are on the Norval Community Association and the barbecue is a fund-raiser for the Association. (Herald photo)

A vicious looking jungle animal (Laura Lynne Taylor) grabbed Richard Fendley, 9, Monday afternoon as he tried to make his way to the Norval Community Centre. The talking gorilla said it was pretty hot under all that fur, despite the cool drizzly weather. (Herald photo)
