"Who's going to tell them?"

"A short time ago the diagnosis was confirmed. I have Huntington's disease. My husband and I will learn to cope. Now... who's going to tell my children they may also have Huntington's?"

As children of a parent with Huntington's disease, they each stand a 50:50 chance of inheriting the disease. All children of Huntington's parents face this risk. Huntington's attacks the brain. Talking, walking and even thought become more and more difficult. Eventually, it leads to death. New research can now tell them if they have inherited the disease. But who's going to tell them we have not yet found a cure? Support the Huntington Society of Canada. So that research can continue and a cure can be found.

Huntington's disease. Make it your cause.
