

Keepin' cool when the heat's on

Crowds of bathers swarmed the beaches at Kelso Conservation Area in Milton Sunday. Temperatures over 90 degrees Fahrenheit sent swimmers to the water about every 30 minutes. (Herald photo)

Philip Parker of Georgetown decided to cool off the hard way during Canada Day celebrations in Glen Williams. His friends stood on the bridge on Main Street over the Credit River daring him to jump from his perch on the underpass. He jumped into approximately three feet of water and emerged without a scratch. Over the weekend record-setting temperatures kept many huddling inside around their air conditioners. (Herald photo)

Tara Roe, left, Bonnie Kelly (centre) and Darlene Lovett hardly moved from their beachside spots on their inflatable rafts Sunday at Kelso Beach. Ms. Roe is visiting her friends from New Zealand. Ms. Kelly is from Mississauga and Ms. Lovett is from Brampton. (Herald photo)

Lazy days n' rays

A photo feature by Mary-Liz Shaw

Matthew Gruenwald, 20 months, cools off with some sand at Kelso Beach on Sunday. Matthew's father Falk looks on. The Gruenwalds came from Brampton to seek relief from sweltering 90 degree temperatures on the weekend. (Herald photo)

After tipping their canoe, a pair of boaters finally head looking for ways to beat the heat. Those not brave for open water at Kelso Conservation Area in Milton on Sunday. The provincial park was packed with visitors enough to rent canoes, could rent paddle boats or windsurfers. (Herald photo)

Robert K.

FINAL SUMMER CLEARANCE

50% TO 75% OFF

All Sales Final

robert k. smith

133 Wyndham St.
Guelph

fashions