

1980 CSB issue comes due Nov. 1st

It's time to check your safety deposit box again. Another issue of Canada Savings Bonds comes due this fall, worth more than $1.2 billion in principal alone.

The bonds are from Series 35, issued in 1980 and maturing on Nov. 1. After that date, they will no longer earn interest.

longer earn interest.

A $1,000 Compound Interest Bond from this Series will be worth $2,091.80 at maturity. Proceeds from this Series can be reinvested in this year's issue, which goes on sale Oct. 26.

This year also marks an important anniversary for Canada Savings Bonds, which became one of Canada's most popular investments from the time they were introduced in 1946.

Ten years ago this fall, Canada Savings Bonds were restyled and given a smarter, more streamlined look.

The change was more than cosmetic, says John Campbell, director of payroll savings for Canada Savings Bonds in Ontario West, who noted that, as part of this change, the once-popular coupon bond was eliminated.

"This made it possible for CSBs to enter the Computer Age and enable us to respond far more easily to any changes in the economic environment and design instruments better suited to meet the changing needs of Canadian savers."

In 1977, more than 90 per cent of all Canada Savings Bonds outstanding were in coupon form. At that time, some 14 million coupons were being cashed annually, creating an administrative nightmare.
