Home Energy Circuit

by Keith Wilson

Q1. I've insulated my attic and improved my windows. What else can I do to reduce my energy bill?

A1. The largest source of heat loss (up to 40 per cent) in most homes is through the cracks and leaks in the walls and ceiling. It is relatively easy and cost effective to air seal and weatherstrip these leaky areas. The crack at the sillplate can be air sealed with butyl caulking. The baseboard should be removed and the crack between the wall and floor sealed with silicone caulking or expanding foam. If the trim is unable to be removed, caulk both sides of the trim and the quarter-round with paintable silicone or acrylic-latex. Air seal the trim in the same way as baseboards.

basements are going to be used as extra living space, it is cost effective to air seal and insulate them to guard against excessive heat loss. Prior to insulating, the basement should be checked for moisture problems. If insulating from the outside, Basectad insulation over footings drainage beds is a good choice, as it will protect the wall from further moisture damage and heat loss. The most common method for interior insulation is to build a 2" x 4" frame wall and fill the space with R12 pink Fiberglas batts. As a further upgrade, to avoid heat loss through the studs, it is suggested to build the stud frame 2" out of the wall to allow an R8 Fiberglas batt to be slid in behind the frame. Be sure to caulk the crack (with acoustical caulking) between the bottom 2" x 4" plate (and vapour retarder film) and the floor prior to installing baseboards.

Q4. As winter approaches, I'm not looking forward to the window condensation problem that always occurs in my home. Is there anything that can be done to avoid the problem?

A4. Condensation appears on windows because they are often the coldest surfaces in the home. Moisture held in the air as a vapour will readily condense on this cold surface. By adding another layer of glazing, the inside of the window will be warmer and less condensation will occur. It may also be necessary to reduce the amount of moisture produced in your home. Use bathroom and kitchen exhaust fans when showering and cooking; avoid drying clothes indoors and vent dryers outside.

For more information, write for the free booklet, "The Energy Efficient Home", to the Fiberglas Information Centre, 80 Bloor Street West, Toronto, Ontario, M5S 2V1.

Mr. Wilson is Technical Services Manager, Fiberglas Canada Inc.

Q2. We are contemplating upgrading our windows next spring. What can we do in the meantime to keep us warm this winter?

A2. Creating an airtight inside storm window is one of the best ways to keep the cold winter draft out and reduce the possibility of window condensation. One of the easiest and cheapest ways to do this is with shrink wrap film. It is attached to the inside window trim with double-sided tape. Once the film is in place, a hair dryer is used to shrink it tight (it is almost invisible).

Q3. Creating more living space for our growing family is a high priority. We would like to use the basement but are not sure how to make it more comfortable.

A3. Regardless of whether
