

Lions annual Georgetown parade

With a ho! ho! ho! Santa descends upon our town

Clowns were popular with the kids at this year's Santa Claus Parade. Once they got off the hot seat, like this high flying clown, they danced up and down the street giving out candies and wishing Merry Christmas. (Herald photo)

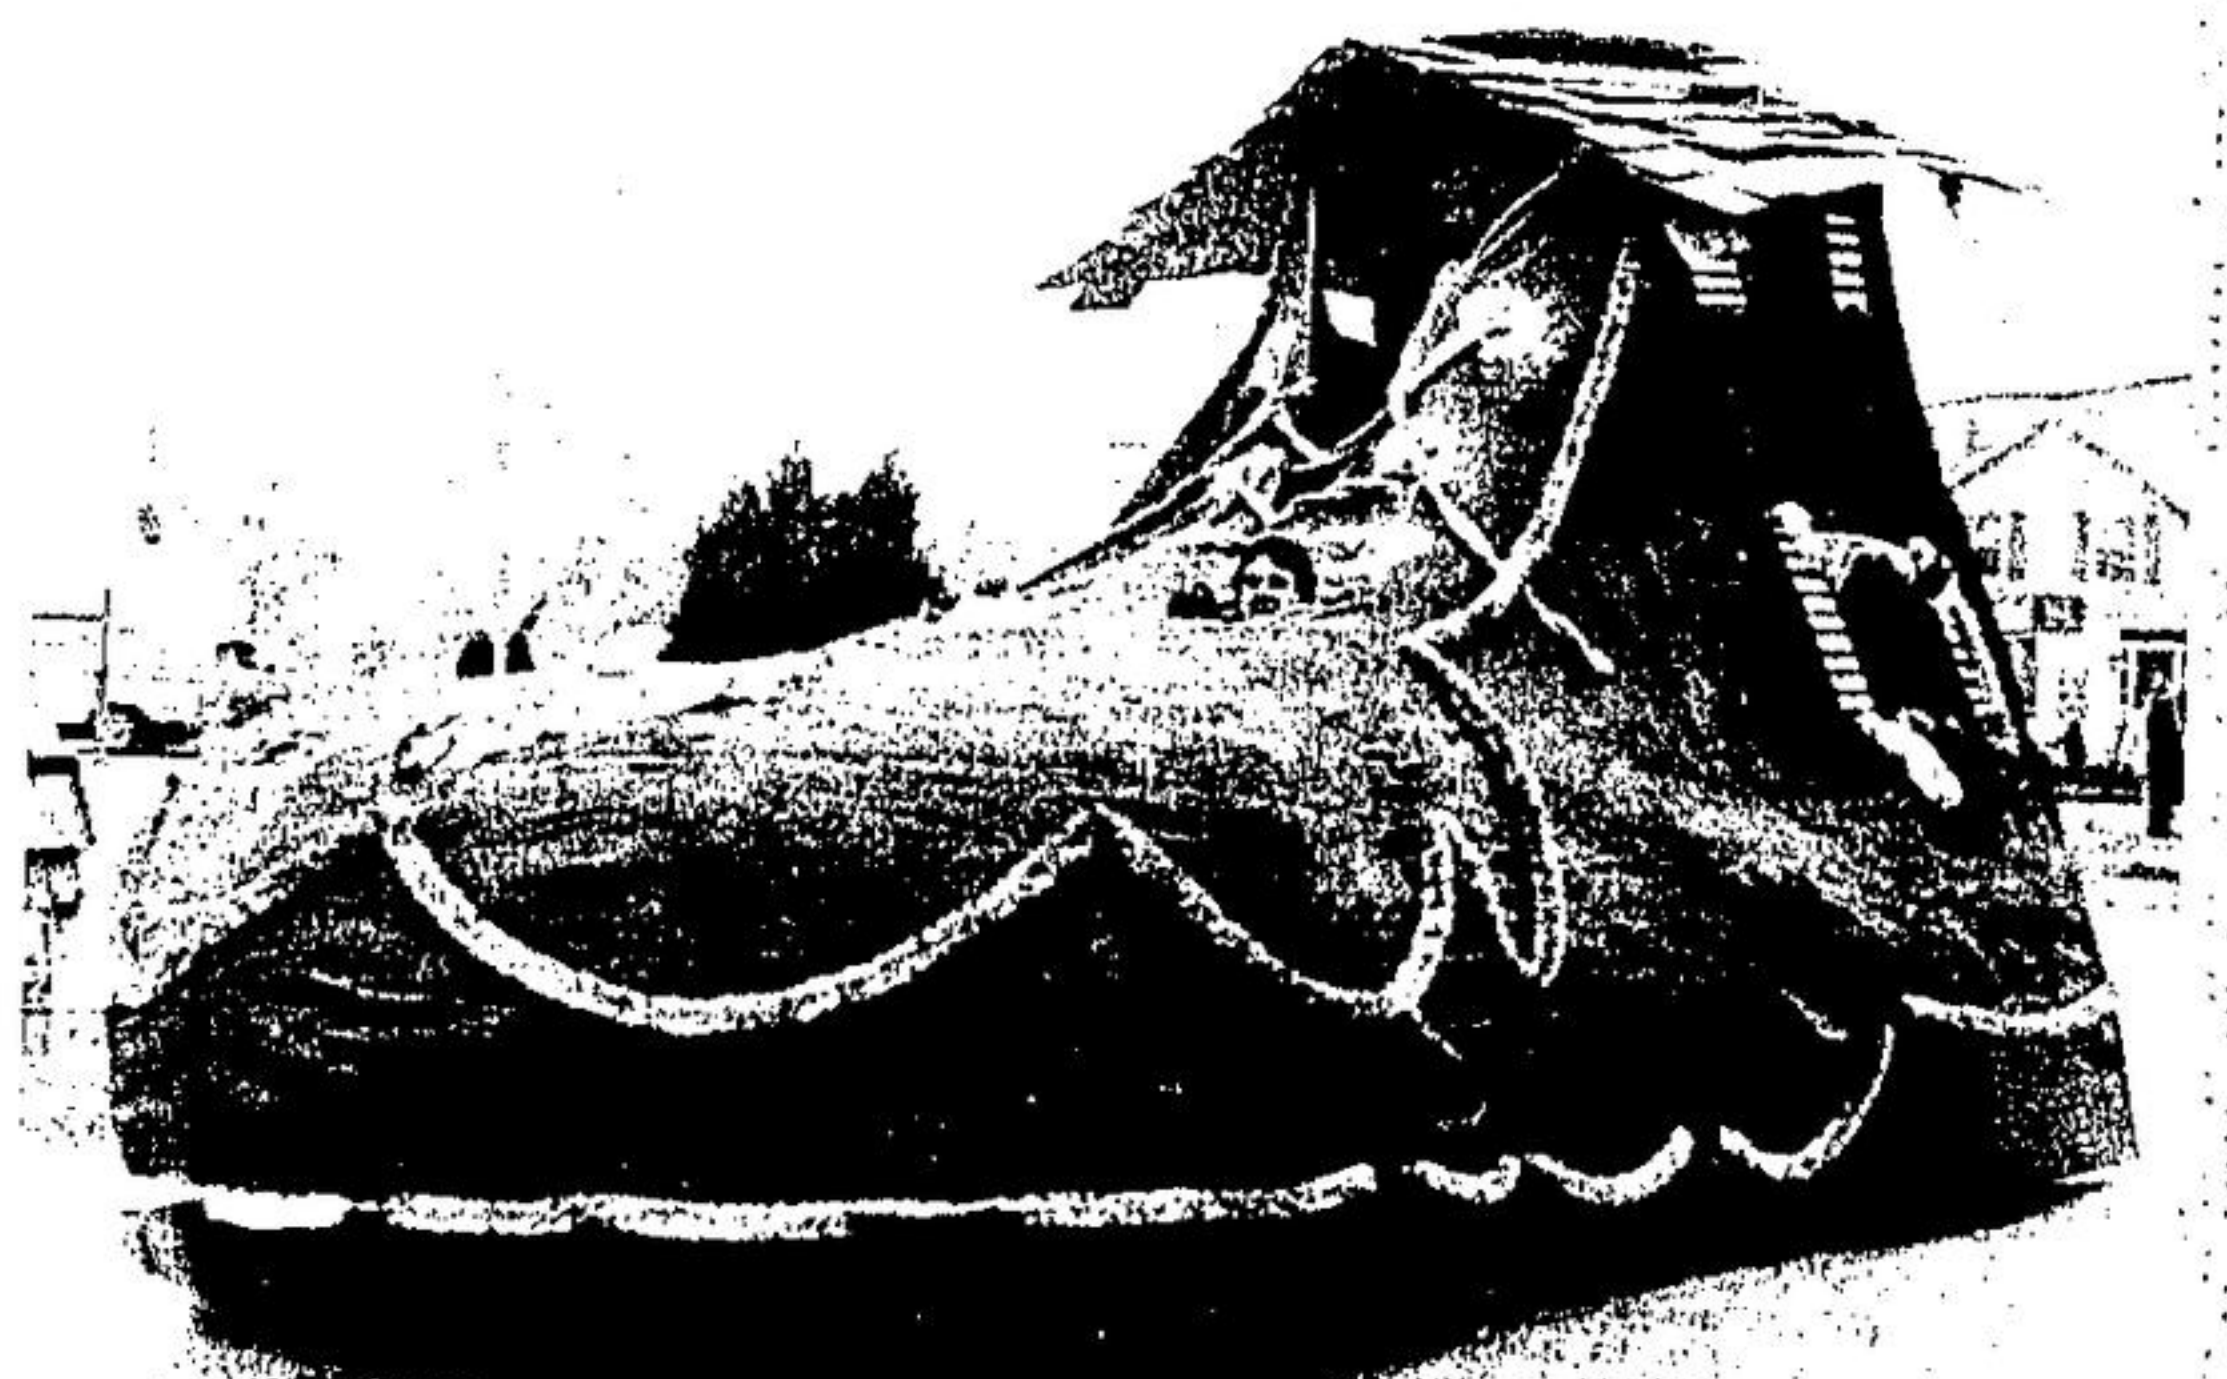

The Little Drummer Boy was alive and well during the Georgetown Santa Claus Parade Saturday. But even the drummer boy and the wise men had to bundle up because of the chilly day. Various floats and marching bands took part in the procession. (Herald photo)

The Georgetown Lions Club organized the annual Santa Claus Parade Nov. 28. The merry man followed the parade which featured an "Old Brown Show" and Dorothy and Toto along with many other floats, bands and clowns. (Herald photo)

Boat safety even had its place in this year's Santa Claus Parade Nov. 28. Various theme floats took part in the parade including an old brown shoe and Dorothy and Toto from the Wizard of Oz. Mayor Russ Miller marshaled the parade which drew attention from everyone when it was led down the street with police cars and fire engines with their sirens sounding loud and clear. (Herald photo)

This Old Brown Shoe, and the old lady who lived in it, trampled its way down the street at the 58th annual Lions Club Santa Claus Parade Nov. 28. The mother seems quite comfortable in this shoe and even her family are smiling and waving despite the fog which prevailed throughout the day. (Herald photo)

Herald photos by Brian MacLeod

The CHICKEN club marched along with their mascot at the Santa Claus Parade Saturday. The foggy weather which threatened the parade held off and although the chicken completed the route no eggs were found in the street afterwards. (Herald photo)

Firetrucks, old and new, led the 58th annual Santa Claus Parade through the streets of Georgetown on Saturday. The Lions Club sponsored the parade which was a hit with the kids. The grand finale didn't disappoint anyone as Santa and his reindeer galloped through the street. (Herald photo)

This man had plenty of fun at Saturday's Santa Claus Parade. He zigged and zagged through the streets as clowns and people riding on floats gave away candy canes and Christmas sweets. This old motorcycle looks as though it may have been in the very first Santa Claus Parade 58 years ago. (Herald photo)

While this floppy eared elephant is looking at the path ahead the tiger and friends waved to the crowd watching the annual Georgetown Santa Claus Parade Nov. 28. This float was one of many which made their way from the Delrex Plaza to downtown Georgetown via Maple Avenue. The fog and cold didn't keep the people away though as they lined up to see the action. (Herald photo)

The Wizard of Oz had his part in the Georgetown Santa Claus Parade which wound through the streets of town Nov. 28. Dorothy and Toto were just a part of the many floats and marching bands in the parade. The fog didn't scare anyone away as some people brought their own fold-up lawn chairs to catch all the action. The parade started at Zellers parking lot and finished in downtown Georgetown. Mayor Russ Miller was the Parade's Marshal. (Herald photo)