SCHOOLS IN THE 1850s (Cont'd)

In 1850, a private school known as the "Anglican Academy" was run by Rev. Dade of the Church of England. The school was located between Georgetown and Stewartown (Maple Ave./Charles St. area).

Rev. Dade had been first maths master at Upper Canada College. In 1858, he also officiated at St. George's Church (which was established very near its present site in the early 1850's) in order that the pastor Rev. Marsh could return to his native England on a visit. However, Rev. Marsh was accidentally given poison to drink on board the ship home and died.

The school was established to prepare students for University entrance and operated on Saturdays from 9-11 a.m. as well as weekdays. Not all of the students were Anglican.

Rev. Dade's tombstone can be seen at St. Georges.
