Flight of an Arrow Story pages 2, 3

Today members of the Avro Aircraft fraternity will be celebrating a special anniversary. The Canadian-built jet fighter aircraft was a promising enterprise and a proud national symbol after its maiden flight 30 years ago. However, the Diefenbaker government discontinued the project soon after and the plane has been a forgotten footnote in Canadian history.

But for the dozens and dozens of Georgetown residents who worked on the plane, the memories of the impressive plane live on. Inside, reporter Brian MacLeod explores the history of the Avro Arrow story and how this plane directly affected the lives of hundreds of local people.
