New coach on board Hayward says Habs won't panic

By PAUL SVOHODA
Herald Sports Editor

Fans of the NHL's Montreal Canadiens shouldn't expect a rash of changes next season despite the club's unusually early exit from the 1988 Stanley Cup playoffs and the hiring of a new coach.

Georgetown's Brian Hayward, who together with Patrick Roy provides the Habs with a formidable goaltending tandem, says the Canadiens are likely to stand pat in 1988-89.

"We finished second overall and Savard (general manager Serge Savard) is pretty stable," said Hayward during an interview with The Herald on June 6. "We're basically a young team."

Hayward was in town as part of the BIG celebration and to participate in a charity golf tournament at Glen Williams.

One major change the Canadiens have already undertaken is the promotion of Pat Burns to head coach, replacing Jean Perron who resigned after the playoffs. Burns, a former police investigator and coach of Montreal's American Hockey League farm club in Sherbrooke, brings a tough image to his new job.

"I really don't know that much about him except what I've heard," said Hayward. "He's famous for tough teams and he's supposed to be a player's coach."

According to Hayward, Burns is likened to fiery New York Ranger bench boss Michel Bergeron. He was a coach with the Canadian national junior team in 1987 that was involved in an infamous brawl with the Soviet junior squad.

The exit of Perron, a Stanley Cup winner in 1987, apparently did not come as much of a surprise to Canadiens players. "The way we bowed out of the playoffs we knew something was up," said Hayward.

Perron's resignation followed the Habs loss to Boston in the Adams division final, marking the first time in over 40 years the Bruins had beaten Montreal in a playoff series.

"I suspect there was something more behind the scenes," says Hayward of Perron's departure. "There were communication problems between Perron and upper management. The relationship between Savard and Perron was not great to begin with."

Hayward says Perron was not close with Montreal players. "We didn't socialize with him at all," he said. "But that's the way it has to be, especially in Montreal."

Playing under the intense scrutiny of Montreal's demanding public does have its inherent drawbacks. The team is often expected to win the Stanley Cup as a matter of course, said Hayward.

He said the reported dissension within the Montreal ranks last season was blown out of proportion. "It became more of a national issue," he said. "That's common in Montreal. If things are not going well, situations are created."

Hayward blamed Montreal's playoff debacle on injuries and frustrations born out of simply not playing well. "We just didn't play well in the playoffs, even against Hartford," explained Hayward.

He said injuries to Montreal sharpshooters Matts Naslund and Stephane Richer were "huge stumbling blocks" to a predominantly grinder style of team. "We played so well as a team ally all year long," said Hayward.

"In the playoffs we had people trying to do more than they could." Frustration led to penalties and an ineffective powerplay did nothing to help the Habs cause, he added.

The trading of tough guy forward Chris Nilan also hurt the Canadiens in their series with Boston, said Hayward. "I'm sure the Bruins were thrilled to have him out of the lineup," he quipped. "We missed his presence in Boston. As a hometown boy he used to skate into Boston Garden sky high."

Boston's mastery over Montreal in the Adams final may ultimately have contributed to their quick four-game loss to Edmonton Oilers in the Stanley Cup final, says Hayward. "I heard Boston players say they had planned all year to get past Montreal in the playoffs," he said. "I wasn't even sure they'd get by New Jersey."

Hayward said injuries also had an impact on Boston's performance in the final with Ken Linseman and Cam Neely both playing hurt. "Linseman was in rough shape," he said. "He never practised during the whole playoffs." According to Hayward, Linseman was a key player in Boston's Adams win but he was ineffective against the Oilers. Hayward also had some thoughts on the New Jersey-Boston game four (Iasco where amateur referees officiated after the NHL regulars called a one-game wildcat strike. The NHL referees objected to the court-ordered presence of Jersey coach Jim Schoenfeld behind the bench after a reported confrontation with referee Don Koharski after game three had landed Schoenfeld a suspension.

"I was embarrassed by it and it was unfortunate for the league," said Hayward. "McCauley (head of NHL officiating, John McCauley) did a hell of a job, but he was also lucky."

Hayward said the absence of any "ugly incidents" helped to ease the situation. "I felt sorry for the players," he added.

Meanwhile, Hayward is hitting the Nautilus weight-training machines and the exercise bike in anticipation of a good start to the 1988-89 NHL season. He expects the same two-goalie situation in Montreal with Patrick Roy and himself sharing the duties. "We're both very competitive," he says.

With a pair of strong seasons under his belt Hayward says he would like to start off stronger than he has in the past when he has been known traditionally as a slow starter with a hot finish.

He says he enjoys the Montreal system where GM Savard lets the coach handle the team. "In Winnipeg general manager John Ferguson would be in the dressing room after a loss yelling and screaming at us," he said. "With Savard there's much less direct contact. We don't see him much during the season but you can always talk to him if you have a problem. I like working with him."

At 28, Hayward says he is at the age where he feels more soreness in his legs after games. To combat that he's doing extra heavy off-season work. "I'm not a runner but I do a lot of aerobic work on the bike and a lot of heavy weight work on the legs."

Hayward says he expects veteran defenceman Larry Robinson, rumored to be retiring, to be back on the Montreal blueline next fall. "I'm pretty sure he'll be back," he said. "He's one of those guys who's always in shape."

As for ex-Habs coach Perron, Hayward says current rumors in Montreal have him ready to sign as the next general manager of the rival Quebec Nordiques.

Top Guns hang on
Midas Top Guns got off to a slow start Tuesday night as the Kentner's scored on the first shift of the game: Ken Whitbread (unassisted) scored from beside the net as his shot was re-directed into the Midas goal by one of the Midas defencemen. Midas Top Guns came back however with three goals to take the lead for good. Gary Beck with two goals and Woody Fabian with a single provided the scoring punch. Helping were Roger Watson (2), Mark Maxwell, Al Martin and Tony Kovacevic. Don Parker on a set up from George Coyle and Dave Krause finished the scoring as Midas hung on for the win.
The 8 p.m. contest was a tight checking affair with the McGibbon Hawks and Choice Air tied at one goal each after two periods. McGibbon's goal was by Ian Syme (unassisted) while Choice Air got its from Ron McKelvey (assisted by Gord Williams). In the third period, Choice Air's lack of scoring showed as they carried the play to the Hawks but couldn't finish the play off. Brian Beaumont ended the game in the McGibbon team's favour as he scored twice in the period. Ray Inglis, Paul Allison and Gerry Coffee all drew assists.
