Peter Gott, M.D.

A new look at an old fable

By Peter H. Gott, M.D.

Children's literature teaches us that every action has its reaction. However, in today's complicated literary climate, reactions do not simply occur, they cascade — in the manner of the good news/bad news jokes that were so popular a decade or two ago. This is one reason for the public's continuing fascination with TV soap operas, some of which are now aired during evening prime time. Not only do reactions cascade, their significance changes and provides for still more reactions.

For example, an idealistic healer enters medical school intending to help humanity and heal the sick. The cost of medical school is so astronomical that by the time he graduates, the young M.D. is $80,000 in debt. This causes him to accept a well-paying residency that does not offer superior training. His wife leaves him, after a year of internship, to marry an undertaker. However, the doctor meets and marries the daughter of a prominent malpractice attorney, the attorney pays the practitioner to dig around the hospital in search of potential liability cases.

Then, one night, the doctor is discovered in the medical records room ... Such ups and downs are familiar fare to the inveterate consumers of television serials.

Many of our simplistic ideas about human behavior have been fostered by children's stories. These stories, long a cultural resource for moral teaching, have failed to keep pace with the modern world. To dramatize my point, I have rewritten a classic children's story. I hope that you will find my expanded version to be superior to the staid old version.

THE BREMEN TOWN MUSICIANS

A rooster, a cat, a donkey and a dog left the farm to seek their fortunes. After several interesting adventures, they came one night to a cabin, where they peered in the window and discovered robbers distributing booty. The thieves were heavily armed.

To drive the criminals from the cabin and save the plunder, the animals formulated a plan. The cat positioned herself at one window, the dog at another, the donkey (with the rooster on its back) at a third. At a prearranged signal, the cat began to meow, the dog to bark, the rooster to crow and the donkey to bray. The startled robbers were terrified and fled. The animals then entered the cabin and commenced to eat the thieves' dinner.

Within 15 minutes, the police arrived. The animals were arrested for breach of the peace. They were later charged with receiving stolen property. After a lengthy trial, each animal was sentenced to two years in the state penitentiary, with time off for good behavior. While in prison, they collaborated on a book and, for an undisclosed amount (said to be seven figures), sold the rights to a paperback edition.

Despite an all-points bulletin and fingerprint analysis by the FBI, the robbers were never apprehended.

Moral: In the real world, as in medicine, timing and a good agent are of the essence.

DEAR DR. GOTT: Every day, I take Cardizem Isosorbide, Lasix, Slow-K, Nitro-Bid ointment, Nitrogard Buccal tab, Nitrostat Sub and Proventil — a total of about 22 pills daily. What is the best way for me to cut down on my pill taking?

DEAR READER: Sit down and talk with your doctor about reducing your medicines. You are taking too much. I am not being presumptuous in making this statement: Some of your drugs are duplicates. For instance, Isosorbide, Nitro-Bid and Nitrostat are all similar nitroglycerine preparations — Nitrogard is, too, probably, but I can't find a reference for it. Therefore, four of your drugs could be combined into a single preparation, cutting down the amount by three. Proventil is for asthma. Unless you have asthma, you may not need it. Heart failure can often mimic asthma, so your doctor may want to address that issue as well.

From the limited information you provide, I'd guess that you require Cardizem (a calcium-blocker to aid heart function), Lasix (a diuretic), Slow-K (to replace potassium losses from Lasix) and nitroglycerine (either in patch, ointment or pill form). Again, discuss this with your doctor; don't discontinue any medication on your own.
